

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

INTRODUCTION.

The preceding volume of the Privy Council Register closed with an entry under the date July 27, 1630, and the present volume opens with August 3rd of the same year. During the intervening week an important event occurred: there met the first great National Council of the reign of Charles I. In a letter addressed by Charles to this Convention, he specifies the chief objects for which it had been summoned. These objects were mainly three: to make provision for his approaching visit to Scotland, to arrange the business which should demand his attention when he came, and, above all, to vote supplies which the state of the English Exchequer now made of urgent necessity. In response to the last demand the Convention agreed to impose a tax of thirty shillings on "every pound land of old extent" for the space of four years—the tax to be levied annually at the term of Martinmas. The other Acts of the Convention have a more or less direct bearing on the business of the Privy Council recorded in the present volume, and in that connection they will call for specific notice.

The period before us extends from August 3, 1630, to December 31, 1631. The most important European event of the time, and one which had its own influence in Scotland, was the triumphant course of Gustavus Adolphus in the Thirty Years' War. In England the dominating facts were Charles's substitution of personal for Parliamentary government, the ascendancy of Laud in ecclesiastical affairs, and the accession of Sir Thomas Wentworth, the champion of the policy of

The Convention of 1630.

Events of the Period.

“Thorough,” to the cause of the King. In the history of Scotland during our period there is but one event recorded which has remained in the national memory—the Burning of the House of Fren draught (October 8, 1630). Of that tragedy it will be seen that there are vivid and abundant traces in the following pages. But if there were no outstanding political or ecclesiastical events to signalise the period, many indications suggest that a temper was growing in the country which foreshadowed the national revolt that was now so close at hand. The nobility as a class were no more reconciled than ever to the Act of Revocation, and they had another ground of discontent in the conspicuous place assigned to bishops in the direction of public affairs. To the people at large it was now conclusively revealed that Charles in his ecclesiastical policy meant to follow the example of his father, and even to outstrip him in his zeal for Episcopal forms and ceremonies. It was a further source of dissatisfaction to the nation at large that Charles had so long delayed his visit to receive his Scottish crown; and general indignation was provoked by a rumour that he never meant to come, and that the regalia were to be conveyed to Westminster, where the ceremony of the coronation could be more conveniently performed. Of this widespread discontent there is no direct suggestion in the present volume of the Register, but there are certain entries which are only intelligible when we remember that such discontent really existed.

The Council. The first change to be noted in the Council is the admission (August 5, 1630) of Sir James Galloway, who had been Master of Requests both under Charles and James, and who was subsequently (1645) created Lord Dunkeld (p. 2). But the chief event in its history was its reconstruction on March 30, 1631 (pp. 187-190). With a few exceptions the new Council was identical with that which had been appointed at the beginning of the reign. If the new list be compared with that given in the Introduction to the preceding volume of the Register it will be found that the greater and lesser officials all kept their places, and that the clerks also remained the same. A few changes, however, are worthy of note. The Marquis of Huntly was not among the new Councillors—a concession, we may suppose, to the anti-Catholic feeling of the late Council, to which Huntly had given so much concern by the open sympathies he had shown with his fellow-religionists. His place was filled by the Marquis of Hamilton, a personal favourite of Charles, but against whom we shall find a more serious charge brought than any that had been laid at the door of Huntly. In Charles's first Council four Englishmen had an honorary place, while in the reconstructed Council there was only one—James Hay, Earl of Carlisle, a Scot, however, by extraction. Archbishop Spottiswoode again headed the list, and with him were associated the Archbishop of Glasgow, and the Bishops of Dunkeld, Aberdeen, Ross, and Dunblane. The number of the new members was forty-six as against forty-seven in Charles's first Council.

The regulations prescribed by Charles for the conduct of business were the same as had been adopted in 1628 (Vol. II., Sec. Series, p. vii.). The Council was to meet in Holyrood House; seven were to constitute a quorum, of whom one must be the Chancellor or President; and in the absence of either of these officers the oldest Councillor was to preside. Again, as in his missive appointing his first Council, and almost in the same words, Charles gives strict directions for ensuring the attendance of members. It was to be the duty of the Chancellor or President to see that there should be full meetings when important business was on hand. In cases of special urgency the Chancellor or President was to summon those Councillors whose presence might be necessary, and, in the event of these Councillors disobeying the summons, they were to be censured by the Council, and their names reported to his Majesty. The powers assigned to the Council were those which it had gradually assumed under the régime of James VI., and may be briefly described as at once legislative, executive, and judicial.

In connection with this reconstruction of the Council, the question naturally rises—what necessity was there for the reconstruction when the new Council was practically the same as the old? There seems but one plausible answer to the question:

Charles wished to remind his Councillors that they held their offices solely at his pleasure and only on the condition of their deferring to his will—a fact, indeed, which had hardly been gainsaid for at least the last thirty years.

It was this new Privy Council that transacted the business recorded in the present volume of the Register. Between the date of its appointment and the last entry, however, the admission of four additional members has to be noted. These were John Lesly, Bishop of the Isles (p. 209), Sir Robert Ker, afterwards Earl of Ancrum (p. 248), Sir Robert Douglas (p. 263), and Sir John Hay of Lands, who took the place of Sir John Hamilton as Clerk Register (p. 590).

this Volume.

In the two preceding volumes of the Register there were two matters which took precedence of every other—the business connected with the Act of Revocation and the action of the Council in suppressing Roman Catholicism. Both of these matters have a place in the present volume, but it is now a place strictly subsidiary. The largest number of entries are those directly and indirectly referring to the great tragedy known as the “ Burning of Fren draught.” Next in point of numbers are the entries relating to Francis Stewart, son of the madcap Earl of Bothwell, who had made himself so notorious in the earlier half of the reign of James VI. Lord Ochiltree, accused of bringing a false charge of treason against the Marquis of Hamilton, also received a large share of attention. It is further noticeable that, in the portion of the Register before us, trade and industry were special objects of the Council’s deliberations. To co-ordinate such a multitude of miscellaneous items is hardly possible, but as, perhaps, the clearest method of presentation, that adopted in the two previous Introductions will again be followed. After a survey of the most important legislation which the Register records, the outstanding incidents of the time will then be noted.

DOMESTIC LEGISLATION.

The Surrenders of Superiorities and Teinds.

As has just been said, there is but scanty reference in the present volume to the great business of the surrenders of superiorities and teinds. Such entries as are to be found, however, show that the resistance to the Act of Revocation was as dogged as ever. The work that was supposed to be going on was the valuation of the stock and teinds on the church lands that had been revoked to the Crown. The machinery that existed for carrying on this work, it may again be noted, was a body of commissioners appointed to meet on stated occasions in Edinburgh, assisted by sub-commissioners in the various presbyteries, whose duty it was to report to the chief Commission such valuations as they had made in the intervals of its meetings. The Council had a means of pressure which, it might seem, should have effectually expedited the process of valuation: no persons were allowed to lead their teinds except such as had licence from the head Commission (pp. 304, 523). But, as a few indications will show, not even this power of coercion availed to stimulate the dilatory commissioners. On February 1, 1631, a new set of chief commissioners was nominated (p. 131), and on August 26th of the same year a meeting was appointed for the 1st of November following. The 1st of November came, and not a single bishop on the Commission (there were four of them in all) made his appearance. In a peremptory letter, addressed to each of them, the Council summoned the delinquent ecclesiastics to appear before them on the 22nd of the same month "to answer upon their neglect": should they fail to present themselves they were informed that each and all of them would be put to the horn (p. 348). If the members of the chief Commission thus misconducted themselves the sub-commissioners were not more exemplary in the performance of their duties. For example, under date 1st March, 1632, we find a batch of fifteen conveners and their clerks put to the horn for failing to give in their report at the last meeting of the Commission in Edinburgh (p. 438). In spite of all delays, however, we are led to conclude that the process of valuation was now nearing an end.

In the preceding volume of the Register it is recorded how the Council made a strenuous effort to rid the country once ^{Papists in} the North.

for all of the leaven of papistry. By confirming the existing penal laws, by the appointment of special commissioners to search out and deal with all suspected persons, by emphatic representations to his Majesty that his kingdom of Scotland was endangered by the growing numbers and audacity of his Roman Catholic subjects, the Council had done its best to accomplish this end. We now learn, however, that the Papists in Aberdeenshire are carrying their heads as high as ever, and are sorely troubling the bishop and the commissioner of the diocese. Of some half a dozen entries relating to the subject, only one seems to call for special notice. This is a report presented to the Council from the Synod of Aberdeen on the continued evil-doings of Papists within its bounds. The report divides them into two classes, both equally mischievous. The one consisted of those who were under sentence of banishment for their religion, but stubbornly refused to leave the country; the other, of such as had gone into exile, but by false representations to his Majesty had cozened him into permitting their return. The object of the report is to show what evil results had followed from the open defiance of the laws by these two classes of Papists. One result, the report stated, was specially to be deplored: many who had been on the point of coming over to the true religion had now become so obstinate that they were prepared to abide "the last dint of excommunication," horning, and banishment, in the belief that any penalties they might suffer would be merely temporary. The Council heartily identified itself with the "grievance" of the diocese of Aberdeen, and sent its report to Charles with an emphatic expression of sympathy in its favour (pp. 508-510).

Prominent Papists.

As usual, we find certain prominent Roman Catholics marked out for special dealing. It was one of the penal laws against Catholics that their children should be removed from their charge, and placed where they might receive a sound Protestant upbringing. The law was chiefly aimed at Catholic nobles, but, as we have seen in the preceding volumes of the Register, these nobles generally contrived by a variety of ingenious devices to elude its application. Not for the first time the Earl of Nithsdale, as being "vehementlie suspected in his religion," was ordered to produce his son, Lord Maxwell, before the Council that it might provide for his education in the religion of his country (p. 363). The Earl was strictly charged to appear with his son on an appointed day, but when the day came he sent a procurator instead with the information that his son had been "many days" in England before the charge had been delivered (p. 396). One of the most prominent and active of the Aberdeen Papists was Dr. William Leslie, physician to the Queen. The Council had long had its eyes upon him, and he had already been prosecuted for saying and hearing mass. When the present volume opens he had become bound to leave the country by a day not later than August 10, 1630 (p. 2). His exile was not of long duration; by a special licence of the King he was permitted to return "to administer physic" to the Marquis of Huntly, who, it appears, had no confidence in any other practitioner except Leslie (p. 71). Sorely against its will the Council was constrained to give its sanction to this licence, but it did not lose sight of the priest-physician. Under date July 26, 1632, we find him again in trouble for a breach of the conditions on which he had been permitted to return. The licence had been granted on the conditions that he should "behave himselfe modestlie" and confine his medical attentions to the Marquis. In the opinion of the Council he had not behaved himself modestly, and, moreover, he had given others the benefit of his skill besides Huntly. Accordingly, he was again summoned to answer for his misdemeanours, but, safeguarded as he was by his interest at Court, the Council could only enjoin him "to carie himself soberlie" in the future (pp. 514-516).—Dame Marion Boyd, Countess of Abercorn, was another Papist who had long tried the patience of the Council. Its former dealings with her may be followed in the Indexes to the previous volumes of the Register, and we have now a further record of the attentions to which she was subjected. First, we have a petition from the Earl, her son, that she might be permitted to return to look after his affairs, which had gone all astray owing to his absence from the country. The petition was granted on condition that she should "conteane herself within her lodging," and "have conference with the ministrie" (p. 83). This licence was granted on 9th December, 1630, but by the following March the Countess found that she could not finish her business without a visit to her house at Paisley, and she accordingly prayed the Council that she might be permitted to sojourn in that town for a season. To this petition the Council also acceded, and, after some delay owing to illness, the Countess took up her abode in Paisley (p. 285). She found her stay there uncomfortable for two reasons: the house in which she lived was out of repair and undesirable as a place of residence for one in her delicate state of health, and the ministers were "not content that she should remain in the neighbourhood." In these circumstances she came forward with still another supplication: might she be allowed to spend the winter in the Canongate as a more desirable place of residence? She received the necessary permission, but only after her son, the Master of Paisley, had become caution for her good behaviour in all matters relating to religion.—It was the rank and connections of Lady Abercorn that protected her from the rigorous application of the laws against Roman Catholics; those of humbler condition were not treated with the same consideration. We have a remarkable example of this in the case of one Margaret Garioch who describes herself as "ane poore, aged, decrepit wōman." For religious offences she had been long warded in the Tolbooth of Aberdeen, and she offered to the Council that, if she were granted her liberty, she would either conform or quit the kingdom. "Aged and decrepit" though she was, the Council must have considered her as a highly dangerous person, since it accepted the latter alternative and enjoined the bishop and magistrates of Aberdeen to see that her banishment was carried into effect (p. 83). Still another prominent recusant was Sir John Ogilvie of Craig, who is described as "ane excommunicat and rebellious Papist." For "his scandalous behaviour" he had been successively warded in Edinburgh Castle, and restricted to Edinburgh and St. Andrews. On his promise of amendment he had been permitted to return to his place of Craig, but there he had behaved more “scandalously” than ever, and he was again condemned to confine himself to the bounds of St. Andrews (p. 337). From a pitiful appeal he made to the Council, however, we learn that he did not reach that town. Owing to a “dissinesse in his head,” he was unable to travel on horseback, and had to be led on foot by two men. “With great trouble” he got as far as Dundee, where he was prostrated by so severe a sickness that he looked only for death. Only “the wholesome and free air” of Craig could restore him, and he prayed that he might be allowed to return there, so that at least he might die with his wife and children around him. His prayer was granted, but on stringent conditions: he was not to move beyond two miles from his house; his children and domestics were “to resort to the kirk everie Sabbath”; for himself he was to remain within doors on that day, and he was not to reset Jesuits or mass priests—all under the penalty of a thousand pounds (p. 384).

There are but few entries in the present volume regarding the administration of justice. In the two preceding volumes of the Register we have seen that the Council, at the suggestion of the King, had assiduously applied itself to the establishment of a system of Circuit Courts. In the portion of the Register before us, however, we have but one mysterious entry regarding these Courts. At page 12 we read that “the Lords thinks fit that the holding of Circuit Courts for this yeere [1630] sall be forborne”—no reason being given for the prohibition. As usual, we find Lord Lorne (afterwards the great Marquis of Argyle) showing a keen jealousy regarding his rights as Justiciar of the Isles. The Sheriff of Bute had taken it upon him to apprehend certain persons accused of witchcraft in that island, and to crave a commission from the Council to try them. Indignant at this encroachment on his jurisdiction, Lorne appealed to the Council, with a result that must have been entirely to his satisfaction (p. 425). At a later date we find the Council granting him full powers to exact fines except in cases when they were “high and great”—the Council in these last cases reserving the privilege of regulating them (p. 459). Finally, in connection with Lorne and his justiciarship we have Charles himself charging the Councillors to support him in the discharge of his office whenever such support was lawful and necessary (p. 574).—Still in connection with law, we find that an old dispute has again arisen regarding the terms to be kept by the Court of Session. In 1587 it had been ordained that the Court was to sit from 1st November to 15th March, and from 15th May to 15th August (Acts of Parl. of Scotland, III., 447). A proposal had been made to alter these terms, but the burgh of Edinburgh made such a vigorous protest against the suggested change, that at Charles's instance the matter was postponed till the next meeting of the Estates (pp. 178, 218). The most interesting entries connected with law are those relating to the appointment of a Commission for "surveying" the written and unwritten sources from which the laws of the country were derived. There had already been many such Commissions, but none of them had borne much fruit. In 1628 Charles had himself nominated a Commission, but though it appears to have met for deliberation (Vol. II., Sec. Series, p. 491), it had apparently fallen into abeyance, as we now find another Commission appointed for the same object (p. 137). This object, we are told, was "for surveying, recognoscing, and considering of the lawes, statuts, and Acts of Parliament of the said kingdome, als weill printed as not printed, with the customes and consuetudes of the same quhilks ar and hes beene observed as lawes within the said kingdome." The new Commission was to prove as inefficient as its predecessors, and twice at least in subsequent times (1639 and 1681) similar bodies were appointed with the like result.

Trade Legislation.—The Exportation
of Victual.

Under date November 2nd, 1630, we have an entry which begins in this expressive fashion :—" Forsamekle as it hes pleased God to visite this kingdome with a most unseasonable, untymous, and lait harvest so that the cornes hes beene universallie evill win and in manie parts of the countrie they ar not yett win, quhilks threatens not onlie ane extreme skarsetie of all kynde of grayne and corne bot ane extreme dearth of the same, to the appearand wracke and undoing of manie poore famileis and hurt of all persons of whatsoever ranke and qualitie," &c. (p. 47). As the harvest of the preceding year (1629) had been equally unsatisfactory, the Council had good grounds for concern, and it took its usual step in the circumstances: it strictly forbade the exportation of all kinds of grain for a year to come. It was easier to pass such a law, however, than to enforce it, and there are indications that many traders contrived to elude all the measures taken to defeat their cupidity. At page 114 we read that James Kerr and Alexander Torrie were summoned before the Council for transporting fifteen and three bolls of victual respectively into England, and in a later entry we have a batch of skippers and merchants heavily mulcted for a similar offence (p. 262). But the Council itself found it necessary to yield a little ground in connection with its own Act. The bad harvest of 1630 had not been confined to Scotland; in the north of England it appears to have been equally scanty—insomuch that there came a petition to the Council from the mayor and aldermen of Newcastle, craving that in their extremity they might be permitted to purchase corn in Scotland for the needs of their town. From a feeling of good neighbourhood the Council granted licence to the lieges in Teviotdale and the Merse to convey corn to the straitened city, but only on two conditions: the victual must be transported by land, and the quantity exported must not exceed 4000 bolls—half a mark of duty to be paid on each (p. 191). On the same page we read that the Council consented to another relaxation of its ordinance. We are now told that not only England and Scotland were suffering, but that there was also "ane verie greate skarsetie and dearth of victuall" in France, Spain, and other parts beyond sea as well. In the case of these countries, also, it was conceded that 4000 bolls might be exported, but on this occasion the Council was not prompted merely by feelings of humanity. The kind of grain which these countries wanted was not appreciated in Scotland, and might, therefore, be the more readily spared. Moreover, the opportunity was one which offered "a profitable returne . . . ather in moneyes or other usefull commoditeis," and accordingly the exporters were enjoined to look out for the best markets in which they might dispose of their commodities. In further illustration of the commercial notions of the time reference may be made to a few entries bearing on the same subject. Andrew Fraser of Stanywode was engaged in building a house, but when he came to the construction of the roof he found himself in a difficulty: no timber was to be had in Scotland, and Norway was the only country where it could be procured. Unfortunately there was a strict law in Norway against the exportation of timber except in exchange for victual, and it was an equally strict law in Scotland that no victual should be sent out of the country. The Council sympathised with the housebuilder in his straits, and permitted him to despatch ten chalders of meal to Norway provided he stowed it in one ship, and did so before the end of the following April (p. 185). On another page we find the Earl Marischal in the same difficulty as Mr. Fraser of Stanywode. He had undertaken to build a bulwark at Peterhead and to repair the harbour of the same town, but no wood was forthcoming, and the Council had to grant him the necessary licence to procure it from Norway (p. 201). So also in the case of David, Lord Carnegie, who was looking after "his better accommodation and ease in his lodgings" (Ib.).

Manufacture and Export
of Salt.

From the earliest period of which we possess any commercial record the manufacture and export of salt had been one of the most lucrative of Scottish industries. It was with keen satisfaction, therefore, that both Charles and his Scottish Privy Council heard of "a new found out mysterie and invention" for the manufacture of the precious commodity. The ingenious inventors of the new process were Mr. James Galloway, Master of Requests, and Mr. Nathaniel Udward, whose various activities prove him to have been one of the most enterprising Scots of his day. The advantages that were promised from their invention were sufficiently alluring: the quality of the salt produced was to be superior to any salt that had been seen before, and half as much again was to be turned out for the same consumption of fuel. The new "mysterie," it was seen, would at once tend to the prosperity of the lieges and to the profit of his Majesty's straitened exchequer. It was with hearty approval of their welcome service, therefore, that Charles sanctioned a monopoly for thirty-one years to the inventors. It remained to be seen, however, whether the new process would fulfil the expectations of its patentees—such monopolies in the past having not infrequently proved as unproductive as those recorded of the Academy of Lagado (pp. 28, 209).—In another entry we have some interesting information regarding the importance of the salt industry to the country. A proposal had been submitted to Charles that the export of Scotch salt into England should be limited "to a small quantitie sellable onelie to ane few persouns." The rumour of this proposal called forth vigorous protests from various quarters. The magistrates of Edinburgh, in the name of their own burgh and those of every other burgh in the country, remonstrated to the Council on the disastrous results that would follow the adoption of such a policy, and the salt-owners and coal-owners, as the parties most directly interested in the proposed embargo, sent in a similar protest. The Council took up the matter with a due sense of its importance, and it is in its letter to the King that we come upon a few facts of economical interest. The coal and salt industries, we are told, were inseparably bound up together. As they then existed, ten thousand persons were employed in the working of both. Should the production of salt be largely diminished, the result must be a proportionate decrease in the output of coal: "without the benefit of the salt these sumptous water workes and mynes required for maintenance and winning of the coale cannot be upholdin, and whiche, being forsakin but for ane moneth, the coale must perish never in anie age to be regaynned." But not only the coal and salt industries would suffer; the carrying trade would be equally stricken. Half of the shipping of the kingdom was employed in the export of these commodities, and it would be a deadly blow to the prosperity of many burghs if their ships were left idle. And, in conclusion, the Council earnestly beseeches Charles not to set his face against that "mutuall freedome of trade" which his father had maintained with "princely care"

(p. 255).—Though salt was one of the chief manufactures of Scotland, it was apparently found necessary to import a special kind of it from other countries. This we learn from an entry forbidding the export of such French and Spanish salt as then happened to be in the kingdom. This foreign salt, it appears, was used “for making and salting of fishe,” for which process the home product was not adapted. But in France an ordinance had lately been passed limiting the export of salt from that country, and hence the Act of the Council. One other item may be noted in connection with this subject: to the Earl of Linlithgow there was granted a duty of two shillings Scots on every exported ton of coal and salt, on the condition that he built and maintained a fort on the island of Inchgarvie in the Firth of Forth (p. 570).

The “Association for the Fishing.”

But by far the most important business connected with commerce which the Council had on its hands was a vast enterprise prompted and eagerly supported by Charles himself. This was what was known in the language of the time as “the association for the fishing,” or, in other words, a joint-stock company, in which all the three kingdoms were equally interested, for drawing the utmost possible profit from such fish as were to be found off the coasts of both islands. It was the largest commercial undertaking that had hitherto been heard of in Scotland, and it will be seen that the people at large regarded it with a due degree of the national caution. The complete history of the scheme is to be found in the record of the Convention that met in Edinburgh, in the last week of July, 1630 (Acts of the Parliament of Scotland, V., pp. 208 et seq.). That record is itself drawn from the Privy Council Register, and supplements the entries in the present volume. As a little known chapter in the economical history of Scotland, the undertaking deserves more than a passing mention. As the documents that tell the story, however, fill more than twenty of the folio pages of the Acts of the Scottish Parliament, it can be but briefly recapitulated within the limits of a general introduction.

The first intimation we have of the scheme is in a letter from Charles submitted to the Council by its Secretary, Sir William Alexander. In this letter Charles presents his reasons for the vast proposal to which he enjoins the Council to give its sanction and loyal support. "Having," he wrote, "with the advice of our counsell heere in England maturelie considered that als weill in thankefulnesse to almightie God as for the benefite of all our loving subjects we ought no longer to neglect that great blessing offered unto us in the great abundance of fishe upon all the coasts of these yllands to the end we may at lenth injoy with more honnour these rights whiche properlie belong to our imperiall crowne and ar usurped by strangers we have considered of a way whiche in tyme by Gods favour may produce this good effect and also increasse our navigatioun and trade," etc. In explanation of the "way," Sir William Alexander bore a body of instructions, an outline of which will show the magnitude of the projected enterprise. The first consideration was that there should be a sufficient number of vessels for fishing the coasts of all three kingdoms. The proposal, therefore, was that the vessels already existing should be supplemented by two hundred more, varying from 30 to 50 tons. The cost of building and equipping 200 such vessels was reckoned at £76,133, 6s. 8d. The outlay was great, but great also was to be the gain. The vessels, once on the sea, were to make "three returnes everie yeere," and each "returne" was to produce its own quota of profit. The profit from the first "returne," it was anticipated, would be £56,000; from the second, £93,734; from the third, £15,680. And so, concludes the sanguine reckoner, "these three fishings in one yeere will repay all disbursements and yeeld in cleere profite all the shippes and netts with thair furniture to serve againe for manie yeeres and beside in money among the adventurers." We seem to have here the very temper that issued in the disasters of Darien.

But Sir William had been sent north with a more practical purpose than merely to submit the details of his Majesty's scheme; he had come with the specific object of seeing it set in motion by the Lords of the Privy Council of Scotland. To the Lords, therefore, were put these precise questions: how many vessels and how much money would Scotland be prepared to contribute as its share in the enterprise? To obtain a satisfactory answer to these queries they were told to address themselves to the nobility and gentry, but specially to the free burghs. Sir William also supplied the Council with further details regarding the means by which it was proposed to work the Association. There was to be one general joint-stock company for the three peoples, and in every large town there was to be a "severall companie" to arrange matters with the "adventurers" in their own neighbourhoods. A foreigner, it was strictly prescribed, could become an "adventurer" only on condition of being a naturalised subject in one of the three kingdoms. The Council was further informed that as the island of Lewis was "the most proper seate for a continuall fishing," his Majesty intended to manage that island himself, and to endow it with one or more free burghs—which last intention, as we shall see, did not meet with the approval of the Scottish burghs in general. Finally, Sir William completed his errand by calling on the Council to appoint a Commission to act in concert with similar Commissions to be nominated for England and Ireland. (Acts of Parl. of Scotland, V., pp. 220-223.)

The sederunt at which this business was transacted was held on the 30th July, 1630, and on August 3rd the Scottish Commission was duly appointed. The 7th of August was a busy day over the matter of the fishing. In the morning the newly-appointed commissioners reported the results of its first deliberation regarding the tenor of their instructions. They had found the "association with England to be verie inconvenient to the estait." Their main difficulty had been with reference to the "land fishing"—by which was meant the fishing in the inland lochs and for twenty miles off the sea-coast. In all times, the commissioners stated, the land fishing had been the peculiar property of the natives, and had never been encroached upon even by the Hollanders. The burghs, they had ascertained, were strongly of opinion that the land fishing should be left to the natives, and that, if the proposed association should be formed, its scope should be limited to the open sea. In the afternoon there was another meeting of the Convention, at which the representatives of the burghs were heard. They told the Convention what it had already heard from the Commission—that, if the land fishings were left in the hands of the natives, the burghs were willing to undertake the management of it, provided they were allowed to set up fishing stations in all convenient places. These opinions having been heard, the Convention empowered the Commission (increased by additional members) to proceed to England, and to render their first report in the beginning of November following. (Ib., pp. 226, 227.)

When the report was presented, the Convention was no longer sitting, and it fell to the Privy Council to consider it. The proceedings of the Scottish Commissioners are not recorded, but we have their criticisms on the general scheme together with the replies of the Commissioners for England. There were two main points on which the Scotsmen were dissatisfied: it had not been made clear that the land fishings were to be reserved to natives, and the proposal of Charles to erect one or more free burghs in the island of Lewis was against "the standing right" of the existing royal burghs. The answers of the English Commissioners to these objections could hardly have given satisfaction. To the first they could only reply that it was not the intention of his Majesty to "take away or derogat frome the particular and personall grants and rights of anie of his subjects," and for answer to the second they referred the discontented Scots to his Majesty "for more full satisfioun." At the same meeting of Council two letters from Charles were read, both bearing on the scheme which he had so much at heart. In the first he commended the assiduity of the Council in the great work, and, by way of stimulating them to further exertions, added a few lines in his own royal hand. "This is a worke," he wrote, "of so great good to both my kingdomes that I have thought good by these few lynes of my owne hand seriouslie to recommend it to you, the furthering or hindering of whiche will ather oblige or disoblige me more then anie one bussines that hes happened in my tyme." In the second letter he empowered the Council to send commissioners to England with absolute powers to make a speedy conclusion of the whole business (Ib., pp. 228-230).

On November 12th, 1630, the new Commission was appointed, and with the full powers on which Charles had insisted. They bore with them a number of instructions which prove that the Council was bent on making as good a bargain as possible. The commissioners were to insist on the reserve of the "inland fishing," and that no Englishman was to be allowed to fish in Scottish seas except as a member of the "association." They were also to represent to his Majesty that Scotland had a grievance in connection with the documents which had hitherto dealt with his projected company. In these documents the name of Scotland did not appear, being confounded "under the name of Great Britane, altho there be no unioun as yitt with England nor the style of Great Britane received there." The commissioners, therefore, were to intreat his Majesty that in all such documents henceforth he should style himself as "King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland." (Ib., pp. 231-233.)

It is not till the 31st March, 1631, that we again hear of the doings of the Scottish Commissioners. On that day a letter was read from them which gave the Council some trouble to answer. When their commissioners had insisted on the reserve of the inland fishing, their English colleagues had asked them to specify what this reserve precisely meant. It was the burghs that had all along persistently held to this exception, and to the burghs the Council now applied for an answer to the question. After some hesitation the representatives of the burghs enumerated the various parts of the coast which, in their opinion, should be reserved to natives. In their selection they were guided by the consideration of the relative dependence of the communities on the fishing industry, and they professed that their decision was made only in favour of those which could not subsist if this industry were seriously affected. The Council, however, thought the fishing grounds thus reserved "to be of too large ane extent," and made a specification of its own which might be more "to his Majesties contentment." (Ib., pp. 234-236.) But even the modified demand of the Council was not to Charles's "contentment." "We cannot conceive," he wrote, "what necessitie can be for reserving of so manie severall places"; and he demanded a more reasonable reply which might enable the commissioners for the three kingdoms to bring their labours to a satisfactory conclusion. Once more, therefore, the Council had to appeal to the gentry and burghs, and in a meeting held at Perth (September 22, 1631) these two bodies made a final declaration. They had abated somewhat from their former demands, and in its communication to Charles the Council expressed the hope that he would find the concessions satisfactory. (Ib., pp. 237-239.)

It is not till the following September (1632) that we again receive definite information regarding the proceedings of the Commission for the Fishing. On the 7th of that month there was submitted to the Council a royal charter definitely constituting the "Association for the Fishing." In deference to Scottish feeling there were to be two copies of this charter, in which the Great Seals of Scotland and England were respectively to have the first place. With regard to the reserved fishing this was the final arrangement: the Association was to be excluded from the coast between St. Abb's Head and Redhead and between the Mulls of Galloway and Cantyre—natives alone being privileged to fish within these limits. Part of Charles's purpose, we have seen, was to erect free burghs in the island of Lewis, but on this point he also found it expedient to give way. The island was to be under his own special protection, but it was not to be within the scope of the Association and was to be left entirely in the hands of the natives. (Ib., 239-246.) Such in its broad outlines is the history of Charles's magnificent scheme for the furtherance of an industry which was to multiply his own and his subjects' resources. From the first it was received with little favour in Scotland, and subsequent legislation on the fisheries of the country abundantly proved that it was very far from fulfilling the sanguine expectations of its royal patron.

A few other entries regarding trade legislation have still to be noted. The new process of tanning which had been patented The New Process of Tanning.

by Lord Erskine was still stubbornly rejected by many of the craft. In 1629 Erskine had proved to the satisfaction of the Council that his method was in every respect superior to the old one; and an Act was passed making it obligatory on every tanner to adopt it. But from the birth of trade corporations in the early Middle Age a pertinacious resistance to all novelties had been their distinguishing characteristic, and the tanners of Scotland seem to have had their full share of this spirit. In the present volume we have at least eight entries recording the summons of successive batches of tanners for defiance of the Act of Council and dogged adherence to the old process.

Yarn.

It is no novelty to find in the Register that dishonest trade and dishonest manufacture were not unknown in spite of watchful guilds and presbyteries. In the following entry we have a general charge against the makers and sellers of yarn. "Forsameekle as the trade and industrie of making of yarne and buying and selling of the same both within and without the kingdome thir diverse years bygane hes provin verie profitable to the countrie, and so long as it wes faithfullie and trewlie used it wes a speciall meane whairby moneyes and other necessar commoditeis wer imported and manie poore people haldin at worke; bot within thir few yeeres there is suche fraude and deceate used by the commouns in not using the first lenth of the reill and abstracting of the trew number of the threids allowed for the hespe and cutt that there is now no trust at all given to the yarne of this kingdome, and there is little or no dispatche for it ather within or without the countrie to the great discredite of the countrie and hurt of the subjects who formerlie traded with yarne" (p. 302). To remedy what is thus described as a national evil the Council adopted a drastic measure: all yarn was to be sold by the weight, and the material of all persons found contravening the law was to be confiscated.

The Pearl-fishing.

The industry of pearl-fishing had been a frequent subject of legislation, and the entries now noted would seem to prove that it was an industry of some importance. In 1622 Robert Buchan, a merchant of Aberdeen, had received a commission to preserve "his Majesty's waters from the unseasonable fishing for pearls." It would appear, however, that Buchan looked more after his own interests than the interests of his Majesty; and the burghs felt so strongly on the point that they petitioned the Convention of 1630 for the annulment of his commission. The free burghs, it was declared, had always possessed the privilege of fishing for pearls whenever and wherever they pleased, and the petition craved that this privilege might be restored to them (p. 669). On the petition being presented to Charles, he desired the Council to call Buchan before it, and to cancel the commission which he had held for ten years (p. 548). Buchan did not yield his claim without a fight; and it was not till 1641 that his commission fell into abeyance (Acts of Parl. of Scot., V., 411).

Maltmen were a class of persons who had greatly exercised the legislature in times past, and they had been the objects of many and stringent laws which they had usually contrived to elude. The two difficulties with them had been to regulate the prices of the malt, and to see that in making the malt they did not go beyond the proper quantity of bere. Of recent years the maltmen had been reaping a golden harvest by keeping up old prices while the value of other commodities had depreciated. The exuberant fortunes of the maltmen had been brought to the knowledge of Charles, with the result that he sent a peremptory letter to the Council calling for such a regulation of prices as should put them on equal terms with other trades (p. 548). Price of Malt.

In the present volume we find the usual ineffectual attempts to reform the currency. It was still the old evil with which the government had to grapple. Foreign dollars kept flowing into the country, displacing the native coinage and turning trade into a game of sharp practice. On September 8, 1630, we have another of the endless proclamations against the importation of foreign pieces. In the usual terms the lieges are charged to give The Currency in the names of all such persons as offer them the prohibited dollars, and if these coins came into their hands, at once to convey them to his Majesty's Mint (p. 24). But the Council was puzzled by another difficulty: what was to be done with the intruding coins if they were given in? To this question they received a practical answer from Mr. John Acheson, "general of the Cunzie House." According to Acheson, the one cause of the derangement of the currency was the circulation of the foreign coins at a rate above that of native money. Supposing the dollars caught, therefore, his proposal was to convert "the basest sort" of them into small money and to confine its circulation to Scotland alone, after the example of France, Flanders, and Germany. In the case of rix-dollars, which were the most valuable, Acheson proposed that these also should be converted into coins of his Majesty, but with value undepreciated, and that they should be used in trade with the eastern countries. If these suggestions were not adopted, there was but one other way of meeting the existing evil: native money must be adapted to the present rate of gold, or, which came to the same thing, the existing coinage of the country must be diminished in fineness or weight. If the latter alternative were adopted, it would be advisable for his Majesty to take counsel with his officials of the Mint in England—a suggestion, we shall see, which Charles laid to heart (p. 63).

To the bewilderment of the Council it shortly afterwards had to entertain a proposal which went directly in the teeth of the proposal of Acheson. The new advice came from the burghs, which naturally had a lively interest in the successful solution of the great problem. According to the commissioners for the burghs, it would be mere folly "to decry or discharge the course of dollours till the countrie were first supplied with money." In the meantime the best policy would be to prevent the further influx of these coins, and that, with this object in view, coal and salt owners should be prohibited from accepting them in exchange for their commodities (p. 155). The Council adopted the suggestions of the burghs in preference to the suggestions of Acheson (pp. 298, 301); but, though this does not appear in the present volume, this policy was only to make confusion worse confounded.

The proceedings in connection with the currency that are above related belong to the years 1630-1631. As there was little sign that matters were mending, however, it occurred to Charles to take Acheson's advice and to consult an official of the English Mint, Nicholas Bryot or Briot. On the 6th December, 1632, this high authority duly appeared before the Council, and produced a "Declaration" that fills two pages and a half of the printed Register. This Declaration, however, is not very explicit, as it implies the knowledge of certain proposals by Charles which are only referred to in the present volume. On one point Briot made a sufficiently frank statement: he roundly charged the Scottish merchants and officials of the Mint with encouraging the importation of the foreign dollars and with deliberately refusing to adopt the only means by which the evil might be cured. Meanwhile, the consideration of Charles's proposals for the remedy of the mischief was postponed till a later day—the 10th of January, 1633, being fixed for the commissioners of the burghs to deliver their opinion before the Council (pp. 578-582).

Another item in connection with the coinage has still to be noted. In 1629 it had been ordained that 500 stones of copper should be coined into penny and two-penny pieces—the object of the ordinance being to supply the poorer classes with sufficient small change to carry on their marketing (Vol. III., Sec. Series, p. xxxii). It would seem that the new coins were inadequate for the purpose they were intended to serve, as we now find the Council committing itself to a larger undertaking. On August 26th, 1631, an order was issued for the coining of 1500 stones of copper into "farthing tokens"—each to have the value of three pennies Scottish. As in the case of the penny and two-penny pieces, the convenience of home marketing was alleged as a motive for the new coinage, but to this motive there is added another which is worthy of note. In the case of gold and silver coins there was already a "correspondence" between England and Scotland, and one of the objects to be served by the new coin was to establish a similar correspondence in copper, and thus to facilitate the trade between the two countries (pp. 323-325).

A Latin
Grammar.

In the introduction to the last volume of the Register we left a special Committee, of which the Lord Advocate, the Bishop of Dunkeld, and the Director of Chancery were members, sitting in judgment on the Latin Grammar of Alexander Home, schoolmaster at Dunbar. On this subject there are no fewer than twelve entries in the present volume, and the story they tell is of sufficient interest to be related in some detail. Apparently the Committee did not find Home's book satisfactory, as they decided to displace it by another grammar, the production of Mr. Alexander Wedderburn, schoolmaster in Aberdeen. But before the Committee's arrangement could take effect accounts had to be settled with the author of the discarded grammar. Henceforward, according to the recommendation, Wedderburn's grammar was to be exclusively used in all the schools of the country, and its author was to have the sole right of printing and publishing it (p. 163). But these were precisely the privileges which Home had hitherto enjoyed, and some composition had therefore to be made between the two rival grammarians. To effect this arrangement four members of the Commission, the work of which was now at end, were specially deputed by the Council; but they evidently found it a business of some difficulty to intermediate between the two parties. Without waiting for a final agreement Wedderburn returned to Aberdeen, whither he was pursued by a letter from the Council charging him, under pain of rebellion, to return by a given day and square his accounts with his defeated rival (p. 176). The next two entries inform us that the burghs have been consulted on the great business, and that they have taken a step of their own to preclude all possibility of mistake (pp. 287, 310). They had ordered 200 copies of Wedderburn's grammar to be printed with the object of ascertaining the opinions of the most learned men in the country. The Council gave its sanction to this proceeding, but ordered the burghs to report the opinion of the learned men to the magistrates of Edinburgh, who in their turn were to report it to the Lords of Council. The learned men were not all of one mind as to the merits of the new text-book. Mr. Robert Williamson, schoolmaster in Cupar, not quite disinterestedly, as we shall see, made some strictures, which still another Committee was appointed to consider (p. 437). The book came triumphantly out of the ordeal—the objections of Mr. Williamson and those of another critic, Mr. James Gleg, schoolmaster in Dundee, being decided to be not “materiall.” In accordance with this decision, the Committee gave in the following report to the Council:—“That the said Mr. David Wedderburne his grammar sall onelie be receaved, rectified, and amended in suche particulars as the saids commissioners hes thought or sall thinke expedient betuix and the secund Moonday of Junij nixtcome, at quhilk tyme, God willing, the saids commissioners sall report thair full judgement and determinatiouns in the said mater concerning the said grammar” (p. 455). This report was given in on March 27th, 1632, and on the 7th June there came a letter from Charles which must have surprised the Council after all its assiduity. The letter demanded that a licence of twenty-one years should be granted to Mr. Robert Williamson (the critic of Wedderburn) to print and sell a Latin grammar, provided the said grammar deserved such a licence (p. 493). The answer to this communication does not appear in the present volume; but under date June 26th we read that the Council finally gave its sanction to the grammar of Wedderburn, and granted him a monopoly of it for twenty-one years (p. 501). If any further proof were needed to convince us that education was a matter of serious concern in Scotland, we assuredly have it in the story of Wedderburn’s grammar.

One of the matters that bulked most largely in the preceding volume of the Register was a great controversy between Edinburgh and Leith. The dispute had turned on the old question of the superiority claimed by Edinburgh over its neighbour burgh; but it had eventually been narrowed down to a single point—the right of Leith to store victual within

its own bounds. At the point at which we resume the story, this was the position of affairs: the Council had overridden a decree of the Court of Session which had declared it to be illegal for the citizens of Leith to store victual without licence obtained from Edinburgh. Edinburgh was not satisfied with the Council's decision, and directly appealed to Charles to have it reversed. The part of the Register which contains Charles's reply has been destroyed (see p. 78), but from the references made to it we gather that it expressed his desire that the Council's decision should be rescinded (p. 81). Charles's letter was read in Council on December 2nd, 1630, and on the 6th of the same month we have the Council's reply. It stated that in deference to his Majesty's order the Act suspending the decree of the Court of Session had been rescinded in every point but one—the denial of the right of Leith to store victual without licence from Edinburgh. To deny this right, it was urged, would be “ane eminent prejudice to the State in generall and a particular hurt of a great number of the nobilitie and gentrie and uthers” (p. 82). But this proceeding was far from satisfying the demands of Edinburgh, which at once took steps to secure the further intervention of Charles in its favour. Alarmed at the possible result of this action, a deputation from Leith appeared before the Council (January, 1631), and lodged no fewer than twenty reasons (afterwards compressed into five) against its being deprived of what it claimed to be its prescriptive right of storing victual within its own bounds (pp. 600-603). What these reasons were the rubrics will briefly indicate, and they need not be recapitulated here. But the magistrates of Edinburgh had not bestirred themselves in vain. On June 23rd, 1631, the Council was constrained to pass an Act which implied a decisive victory for the capital. Nobles, barons, gentlemen, and others were to be allowed to send victual to Leith and to store it there, but to the inhabitants of Leith themselves the right was denied (pp. 248, 251). All that Leith could do was to protest against this new Act of Council which so summarily cut short its late triumph, but it boded ill for the future that the Council's latest decision had the express warrant of Charles (p. 251).

It was not only in its dispute with Leith that Charles showed himself gracious to his Scottish capital; there are other indications to prove that he was specially desirous of being on good terms with its citizens. Thus we have a letter from him confirming all their privileges, and urging the Council to do its utmost to conserve them. With a manifest reference to the controversy with Leith, he writes: "We do heirby speciallie recommend unto yow that in all suche causes concerning thair rights and priviledges as come before yow they may have order given for settling thair of as our lawes doe allow with all convenient expeditioun" (p. 432). For this favour shown to Edinburgh on the part of Charles we find an adequate reason in another class of entries in the present volume. We have seen that a principal part of the business of the Convention that had met at the end of July, 1630, was to impose a tax of thirty shillings on "everie pund land of old extent"—for the space of four years. In connection with the imposition of this tax Charles had graciously indicated to the burghs that he would be willing to accept a composition for all the four years' taxation. Several burghs accepted the offer, and specified the sums which they were willing to pay. The sums offered may be taken as a fair measure of the relative wealth of the principal Scottish towns, while the lead which so easily belongs to Edinburgh helps to explain Charles's favour for that burgh (p. 596). The respective sums compounded for were as follow:—Edinburgh, £40,000; Aberdeen, £5800; Glasgow, £3262 10s.; St. Andrews, £1960; Stirling, £1691 8s.; Linlithgow, £652 10s.; Canongate, £400; Dunbar, £363; Culross, £338; Hamilton, 400 merks (all in Scottish money).

A few other items regarding the burghs have still to be noted. Between the burgh of the Canongate and the burgh of Edinburgh there was a longstanding jealousy which had led to frequent disputes in the past. Of the nature of these disputes we have a pleasant example in the following case. Four "kists" (coffins) had been made by certain wrights in the Canongate, and had been conveyed by them to parties in the burgh of Edinburgh who had ordered these commodities. In each case the coffins had been appropriated by certain of the wrights of Edinburgh, and in the opinion of the wrights of the Canongate this was a violent breach of their privileges. The deacon of the craft, therefore, together with six of its members to support him, laid their complaint before the Council. A decret of the Council itself, they pleaded, had confirmed the privilege for which they contended. By that decret it had been ordained that the wrights of the Canongate should suffer no "trouble or impediment . . . in presenting thair worke to the mercat of Edinburgh, and selling the same upon the ordinarie mercat dayes." Edinburgh, Broughton, and the Canongate had each its special interest in the case, and each sent its representatives to bear their testimony. The representatives of Edinburgh took their usual line in questions of this nature: they maintained that in accordance with instructions from his Majesty it was by the Court of Session and not by the Privy Council that points connected with the liberties of Edinburgh should be tried. Moreover, they urged, in similar actions between the craftsmen of Edinburgh and the craftsmen of the Canongate, the Council had given decision in their favour. When a Canongate glazier repaired windows in the burgh of Edinburgh, the bailies of that burgh had placed him in ward, and the Council had approved of their action. Again, when the Canongate weavers lodged a complaint against those of Edinburgh on precisely the same grounds as those now put forward by the wrights, the Council had likewise rejected their plea. Finally, the representatives of Edinburgh maintained "that the bringing in of coffines and dead kists frome the Cannogait to the burgh of Edinburgh must be interpret to be ane direct working within the said burgh of Edinburgh, quhilk priviledge no unfreman can lawfullie challenge, becaus the maker of the coffine must take the lenth and breadth of the corps for whome it is made, he must call the nailes, dresse, calfat, and perfyte the coffine after it is brought in, quhilk is a direct working." Between the Council and the burgh of Edinburgh there had long been somewhat strained relations; and on the present occasion the Council had the satisfaction of finding that the law was against the jealous burgh. It decided that, as the seizure of the coffins was an act of violence, the case properly fell within its jurisdiction, and it gave as its judgment that the craftsmen of the Canongate had a perfect right to make coffins and sell them to any persons, burgesses or others, resident in the burgh of Edinburgh, provided they did this business on market days only (pp. 460-463). To conclude these references to the burghs, we may draw attention to the alteration of fair-days within the diocese of Aberdeen, where by frequently falling on Sundays they had created a public scandal (p. 87); to the conflict of jurisdiction between the High Constable and the burghs (p. 584); and the case of the defaulting Edinburgh apprentice (p. 117).

In the present volume we have to note a re-awakened interest ^{New Scotland.} in the colony of New Scotland. The occasion of this renewed interest was the assertion on the part of France that the Scots in founding their colony had appropriated lands of which France had prior possession. The French King had made this representation to Charles, who called on the Privy Council to supply him with precise information as to the Scottish claim (Vol. III., Sec. Series, pp. 613, 614). The Council gave him the information he desired, and urged him at the same time "to take to heart the maintenance" of his plantation in New Scotland (pp. 40, 46). This letter was written September 9, 1630; and it is not till the 28th July, 1631, that we discover that definite action is being taken for the furtherance of the colony. From another communication of Charles we learn what were the means adopted to effect this purpose. On the foundation of the colony James VI. had ingeniously devised his well-known plan for attracting adventurers to the enterprise. By paying 6000 merks, or, as an alternative, on sending out six skilled workmen and maintaining them for two years, anyone might receive land to the extent of 30,000 acres, and become a "Nova Scotia baronet" besides. It was on the attractiveness of the new title that James and the originator of the undertaking, Sir William Alexander, appear to have mainly depended for alluring candidates to the colony. But from the beginning there had been no great eagerness shown to jump at the bait, and, what was specially to be deprecated, there had all along been a disposition to make light of the new dignity. If this disposition continued, it would not be well for New Scotland, and, accordingly, King, Council, and Alexander himself agreed that the most effectual means of advancing its interests was to let all Scotsmen know that the new title could not be safely slighted. At the market-crosses of all the chief burghs it was to be proclaimed that his Majesty would "let nane of the baronnets be anie wayes prejudged in the honnour and priviledges conteanit in thair patents, bot wil punishe all that darre presooome to wrong thame thairin." For the further encouragement of adventurers it was added that his Majesty had not the slightest intention of abandoning his claim to "New Scotland and Canada," and that he pledged himself to the protection of all his subjects who should be disposed to settle there. Since this was all the action that King and Council were disposed to take in the interests of the colony, it was evident that it could have no very brilliant future before it (pp. 299, 300).

Gipsies and Irish Beggars.

Gipsies and Irish beggars were two perennial plagues of the Scottish legislature. Against "the counterfoote theeves and lymmaris, callit the Egyptians," we have a renewed specimen of the enactments that were directed against them. The standing law that hung over their heads was that any of his Majesty's subjects could "caus take, apprehend, imprison, and execute to the death the saids Egyptians, als weill men as weomen, as common, notorious, and condemned theeves be ane assise onelie to be tryed that they ar callit, knowne, repute, and haldin Egyptians." In spite of this terrific enactment gipsies continued as numerous as ever, and specially in the northern counties. Strolling about in gangs, and armed with lethal weapons, they terrorised the lieges wherever they appeared, and had become "ane insupportable burdein to the countrie." The Council could not go beyond its previous legislation against the hopeless race; and it was only left to it to urge all responsible parties to carry the law into effect with the vigour which the evil demanded. The Irish beggars appear to have made as light of the executive as the gipsies. On November 19th, 1629, they had been ordered to quit the bounds of Scotland within fourteen days, and not to return under pain of death (Vol. III., Sec. Series, p. 354), yet under date September 8th, 1630, we find the same people under a similar warning to leave the country within fifteen days (p. 22).

One of the results that had followed James VI.'s attempt to force a legislative union between England and Scotland had been the abolition of the "hostile laws" which both countries had passed against each other in relation to trade. Though nominally abolished, however, hereditary jealousy and antipathy had proved too strong for legislation, and at the date we have reached the two nations still maintained their war of tariffs. To put an end to this state of things, so manifestly prejudicial to the interests of both, Charles issued a vigorous proclamation to enforce the existing laws. In matters of trade the three countries were to be one; and English, Irish, and Scots were to interchange their commodities as fellow-subjects of the same commonwealth. As the future was to show, however, it was only the slow growth of opinion that was to bring home to rulers and subjects alike that in the breaking down of all trade barriers lay the best interests of both.

DOMESTIC INCIDENTS.

Throughout the autumn of 1631 the Scottish people were given to understand that in the ensuing spring they would at length have their King in their midst. On August 4th, 1631, it was definitely proclaimed that Parliament would meet on April 13th of the following year, that the King would preside over it, and that he would seize the occasion of his visit to receive his crown. On the 16th of November, Charles gave a further pledge of his intention by expressly announcing to the Council that he might be expected at the appointed time, requiring that, meanwhile, all preparations should be made for his visit, specially calling the Council's attention to the preservation of game

(p. 372). Once more, therefore, and for at least the tenth time, the Council had to bestir itself for the reception of its master. The various details connected with the preparations are not recorded on this occasion, but one item is worth noting; the Treasurer and Deputy-Treasurer were told that in disposing of beer and other provisions provided for the royal visit they should do so "to the best avail and advantage" (p. 430). It was probably with well-grounded scepticism that the nation had heard that they were at length to be honoured by his Majesty's presence. If such was their feeling, they were not undeceived. On February 15th, 1632, Charles once again wrote, and told the old story: he found his engagements such that his visit must be deferred for another year (pp. 440, 441). Assuredly the Scots had good reasons for concluding that Charles was making a convenience of his "ancient kingdom."

Levies for Foreign Service.

Since the beginning of his reign Charles had at least found it convenient to have Scotland to draw upon when his foreign policy required an army to give it effect. In the opening years of his rule his own wars with France and Spain necessitated a steady supply of troops, but even when these wars were at an end, his entanglement with the great German quarrel rendered it necessary that he should contribute his own quota of men to the assistance of his allies. Every year, therefore, he had been issuing warrants for the levy of Scottish volunteers to proceed where he might order them. During the period before us Charles had to make larger demands than ever for Scottish levies. It was in the summer of 1630 that Gustavus Adolphus began his brilliant campaigns against the armies of the Emperor; and after long negotiations Charles cast in his lot with him and agreed to support him with English reinforcements. He issued six warrants in all for the enlistment of men for service under Gustavus, and, if all these warrants took effect, 12,600 Scots must have given their swords to the cause of Protestantism of which the Swede was the champion. The largest of the bands levied was one of which the Marquis of Hamilton was the commander, and for reasons afterwards to be noted it has a place in the domestic history of the country.¹ To these 12,600 Scots, who were to fight under the King of Sweden, a detachment of 1500 has to be added whose destination was the Low Countries, where they were needed to fill up gaps in the Scottish regiments. (See Index, s.v. Soldiers.)

Questions connected with maritime trade always occupied a ^{Maritime} due share of the Council's attention, and in the present volume ^{Trade.} they fill a greater space than usual. The expediency of erecting safety lights on the Isle of May and on the Skair Heads (the Big and the Little Scare in Luce Bay) was the subject of much deliberation—all parties being agreed that the beacons were necessary, but differing as to who should be at the expense of erecting them. A more important question was that of "ballast in the Forth." An alarming report was given in to the Council regarding the state of the river Forth above Queensferry. In that part of the river skippers were in the habit of depositing ballast wherever they came to anchor, with the result, it was alleged, that navigation must soon become impossible (p. 11). A special petition to Charles had called his attention to this danger to "the cheefest place for trade" in his northern kingdom, and it was at his instance that the Council took steps to avert it. A Commission appointed for enquiry and report led to no immediate action, and it was not until the matter was referred to the burghs that an enactment was passed forbidding the casting of ballast except at specified points—the burghs undertaking to report once a year on the condition of the river (pp. 303, 335).

In the present volume there is frequent mention of pirates ^{Pirates.}—a race who had been the scourge of maritime traders from the beginning. The Lord High Admiral had special instructions for dealing with them. It was on the West Coast that pirates had shown themselves specially mischievous, and the Admiral was commissioned to enlist such masters of ships as were willing to give their services in encountering them—the condition of such services being that any loss sustained should be made up to the losers (p. 270). At page 305 we read that Lord Cantyre earned the special commendation of the Council for a successful exploit against a pirate ship, which had been one of a number “be whome his Majesteis good subjects wer daylie infested and thair goods spoiled.” Putting to sea “in ane great boate weill manned and appointed with all warre-like furniture,” Cantyre came up with the ship in question and gave her battle. The fight was a desperate one (“ane sharpe and cruell conflict”), and Cantyre lost several of his men, but his victory was complete, and such of the pirate crew as were taken were handed to the Lord Admiral “to underly thair deserved punishment.” On the East Coast it was the “freebooters” of the Low Countries that played havoc with Scottish trade, and, as a few examples will show, these freebooters carried on their business with sufficient audacity. On the 19th of May, 1632, the Council had to communicate with the Mayor of Newcastle to the following effect. The day before, two freebooters of West Flanders had cast anchor in the Roads of Leith under the guise of friendly trading vessels. In the course of the night they made off with a Flemish ship, and on their way out of the Firth took several craft which were part of a merchant fleet that had just arrived from Holland. The Council had heard that there were commissioned “waughters” off the Northumberland coast, and its reason for addressing the Mayor was that he should set these watchers on the track of the pirates with the object of recovering the missing ships (p. 488). In another letter of the Council, addressed to the magistrates of Blackney, a similar exploit is recorded of a Dunkirk freebooter. By showing the colours of the Prince of Orange it got alongside of a Leith ship bound for the Low Countries, and appropriated its cargo. On its way home to Dunkirk, however, the marauder was cast ashore on the English coast, and the people of the neighbourhood made free with its spoils. To recover the goods of the proper owners, therefore, was the object of the Council’s communicating with the magistrates of Blackney (p. 499). Other sources of annoyance connected with the shipping trade were the frequent misunderstandings that arose on questions of maritime law. Examples of these misunderstandings will be found at p. 401, where we have a letter of expostulation (in Latin) addressed to the magistrates of Lübeck regarding the alleged illegal seizure of a ship of that port by a Scottish privateer, and at p. 452, where we have another letter in which Charles is informed of the capture of a Scottish trader under circumstances which involved a breach of international law on the part of West Flanders. But the most notable case of this nature was that of Captain David Robertson, which has already been before us in ^{Captain} ~~Robertson.~~ the preceding volume of the Register. During the time of peace the ship of which he was owner and captain had been attacked and captured by two Hamburgers — several of his crew being slain in the encounter. The magistrates of Hamburg had replied to an expostulation of Charles, but the Council had not found the reply satisfactory, and granted to Robertson the letters of reprisal for which he had petitioned. It is at this point we take up the story as it is revealed in the present volume. Robertson had had a considerable experience of privateering, and he must have plied his commission to some purpose, as we find the magistrates of Hamburg writing to the Council to have his letters of reprisal cancelled (p. 187). From a subsequent entry we learn that Robertson has died, but that his “letters” have been renewed to his “partners” (pp. 413, 420). Instead of one captain we have now two (Captains Orrock and Scott) carrying on the game of reprisal, and this they seem to have done too energetically for Charles, but not so for the Scottish Privy Council. A letter from Charles proves that for some reason he was now desirous of making himself pleasant to the city of Hamburg. He had himself granted the warrant for the letters of reprisal to the partners of Robertson, but now he tells the Council, though in somewhat ambiguous terms, that the partners must content themselves with what was originally due to the deceased Captain Robertson, and that the letters of reprisal must be cancelled (p. 490). The Council replied with a recapitulation of the whole affair from the beginning, and the tone of its letter implies that in its opinion the heirs of Captain Robertson were the aggrieved parties (pp. 557-560).

Witchcraft.

Out of the multitude of witchcraft cases recorded in this volume, there are a few that call for special notice. Marion Mure, widow of George Brown in Leith, of her own accord, sought the bailies and minister of Leith, and informed them that she had been a witch for many years past, and that at the persuasion of the devil she had renounced her baptism and taken the name of Katherine. In these circumstances the minister could only petition the Council that the bailies of Leith might be empowered to place her in their Tolbooth—a petition which the self-accused witch had herself urged. From the subsequent proceedings of the Council we are led to believe that it found the case one for the physician rather than the magistrate. A certain Dr. Gellie was called in and asked if he knew of “anie disease or infirmitie” from which Mrs. Mure was suffering. He was able to tell the Council that he had seen her, had found her suffering from “hypochondriack distractioun,” and had given her a prescription to take to an apothecary—which, however, she had failed to do. We find no further mention of the case, but it is interesting to note that the Council took such a purely physical view of a matter which was generally regarded as peculiarly “metaphysical” (p. 426). In another case the Council was by no means disposed to make allowances for pathological conditions. It was brought under its notice that Mr. George Sempill, who had at one time been a preacher, was “a bizzie practizer and consulter in points of witchcraft.” That a preacher should be suspected of such practices was deemed a scandal which could be dealt with only by the Council itself, and “Mr. George,” therefore, was summoned to appear under pain of rebellion. The person who had informed the Council regarding his backsliding was Sir Walter Stewart of Minto, and, when Sir Walter came to be examined, it appeared that he had based his information on what he had heard from one Agnes Boyd who was herself under trial for witchcraft. From what we read on pp. 92-93, it would appear that Boyd withdrew the charge (pp. 24, 50). The case illustrates how readily the terrible charge could be vamped up by unscrupulous or over-scrupulous persons. At pp. 111-112, we have an instance of a charge of witchcraft which the Council itself declared to have been without foundation. We further find the Council exposing one case of barefaced imposture. A certain John or James Balfour practised the not uncommon profession of witchfinder, giving out that by the usual method of thrusting pins into the bodies of suspected persons he could discover the devil's mark. The Council having heard of Balfour's performances summoned him to give an account of himself. He stoutly stood to his profession, but the Lords, we are told, after advising, found "that the said James Balfoure his knowledge in this mater hes onlie beene conjecturall and most unlawfullie used within God's kirk," and forbade him to exercise his art at his own peril (pp. 427-432). To realize the horror with which those suspected of witchcraft were regarded we have but to read the list of charges which were found proven against Christian Paterson, who is described as the wife of George Carmichael in Hirdmestoun, near Haddington. She had laid a "heavie disease" on one person, given "madnesse and phrenesie" to another; she had murdered a third by witchcraft, stricken a fourth with "heavie sicknesse," and ruined the bodies, souls, and worldly estates of others (p. 334). But the most notorious case of demonology that now occupied the Council was one which has already been noted in the preceding volume of the Register. Alexander Hamilton, a notorious warlock, who had met the end which he had courted, had accused Lady Home of Manderston of seeking the death of her husband by unholy practices. In point of fact the husband and wife had long been on bad terms, and Lady Home had even gone so far as to sue for a divorce. Sir George, her husband, however he might regard his helpmate, was indignant that such an aspersion should be cast upon his household, and appealed to the Council to have the matter probed to the bottom. It considerably hampered his endeavours, however, that he was so deeply in debt all round that he dared not show his face in Edinburgh for fear of arrest by certain of his creditors. Time after time, therefore, we find him appealing for protection that he might be at liberty to clear his good name in the presence of the Council. But this was no easy matter, as the more the business was examined the more complicated it was found to be. When the warlock, Hamilton, had been pressed regarding his charge against Lady Home, he admitted that he had received his information from another warlock, John Neill of Tweedmouth. A further revelation connected with the charge casts its own light on the spirit of the time. From the confession of James Mowat, writer in Duns, it came out that he had forged the deposition of Hamilton in which he had incriminated Lady Home. But even this revelation does not seem to have been conclusive in Sir George's favour, as on the 8th of August, 1631, seven months after Mowat's confession, we find it stated in a letter of Charles, who had all along been interested in Home, that the case was not yet brought to "a finall period" (p. 316). Finally, in connection with the subject of witchcraft, attention may be drawn to the report of the trial of "John Philip, vagabound," in the Courthouse of Banff, in which the method of procedure in such cases is fully illustrated (pp. 637-639).

Contribution to the Ministers of the Palatinate.

A more pleasant aspect of the time is presented by the charitable efforts of the country in favour of the ministers of the Palatinate who were suffering from the results of the Thirty Years' War. On June 30th, 1629, Charles wrote to the Council, drawing its attention to the pitiable plight of those ministers who had been driven in destitution from their homes, and who could find no help except from their brother Protestants in other countries. A general collection in their behalf had been ordered throughout England, and Charles recommended that a similar collection should at the same time be made in Scotland (Vol. III., Sec. Series, p. 275). On January 20th, 1631, we find that the Council has heartily adopted Charles's recommendation. Letters addressed to the bishops urged them to bring the case of the exiled ministers before all the parishes in their dioceses (pp. 118, 131), and copies of a Latin letter from the ministers to the Council were enclosed along with them. The Council itself organised the charitable scheme; George Suttie and William Gray, merchant burgesses of Edinburgh, were appointed receivers of such sums as might be contributed, and all care was to be taken that the "collection" should reach its destination with as much speed and as little expense as possible (p. 132). When the moderators and clergy of the dioceses of Glasgow and St. Andrews showed themselves dilatory in sending in their respective collections, they were sharply told to do so at once "under pain of rebellion" (p. 277). As the result of its efforts the Council was able to send a substantial sum of over £3000 to relieve the wants of the destitute ministers.

On the 5th of July, 1631, the Council had before it a letter from Charles which must have been heard with various feelings by the fourteen members who happened to be present. The object of the letter, they were told, was to assure them of the falsity of a rumour which might have reached their ears. The rumour was to the effect that the Marquis of Hamilton, the Earls of Haddington, Roxburgh, and Buccleuch, and others not named were lying under suspicion of practices directed against his Majesty's own person. The matter here referred to is one of the many mysteries to be found in Scottish history. The Marquis of Hamilton, the principal party implicated, had succeeded his father in 1625, and was now only about twenty-four years of age. From the first, Charles had shown himself kindly disposed to the young Marquis. He had induced him to come to Court, had made him Master of the Horse, and "used him with so much tender kindness, that his carriage to him spoke more of the affection of a friend than of the power of a master" (Burnet, The Memoirs of James and William, Dukes of Hamilton, p. 4, edit. 1677). But Hamilton was not content to be a mere Court favourite; he burned to distinguish himself as a soldier. As the most direct means of attaining this end, he came under an obligation to Gustavus Adolphus to raise a force of 6000 men for service in the Thirty Years' War. With the permission of Charles the Marquis set about raising his levies, which were to be partly Scots and partly English. This work accomplished, he was on the point of departure for the scene of action when that charge was raised to which Charles referred in his letter to the Council. The person who raised it was Lord Ochiltree, the hereditary enemy of the house of Hamilton. He was, in fact, the son of the notorious pseudo-Earl of Arran, who in the early part of James VI.'s reign had possessed himself of the titles and lands of the then forfeited Hamiltons. The accusation brought by Ochiltree against the Marquis was that his real object in raising the levies was not foreign service, but the seizure of the Scottish crown. As nearest to the throne of all Scottish families, the representatives of the Hamiltons might naturally be suspected of such a design, and from the reign of Mary till the union of the Parliaments every successive head of their house at one time or other lay under this suspicion. What gave force to Ochiltree's accusation was the fact that he professed to have derived his information from Hamilton's own intermediary with Gustavus, David Ramsay, a gentleman of the Privy Chamber. In carrying out Hamilton's business, Ramsay had enlisted the services of Lord Reay, and it was from Lord Reay that Ochiltree had learned Ramsay's opinions of Hamilton's real intention. If we may believe Burnet, Charles refused to listen to the story, and treated his favourite with greater kindness than ever. At Hamilton's own desire, however, Ramsay and Reay were brought face to face, with the result that, while Ramsay denied having made the statements which Reay attributed to him, Reay stood to his original averment. (Ib., p. 13.) Whether from policy or from conviction of Hamilton's innocence, Charles consistently acted as if all were well. He declared to the Council his belief in the loyalty of Hamilton and the other nobles at whom Ochiltree had pointed, and he gave the best assurance of his belief by urging on the levies which were under the special charge of Hamilton (p. 263). He took another step that pointed in the same direction: he sent Ochiltree to Scotland to be put through the form of a trial which should convince the Council and the country of the baselessness of the charge he had brought against Hamilton and the other Scottish nobles above-named. Brought down to Edinburgh as a prisoner, he was lodged in the Tolbooth, there to await the trial that was appointed for him. He was guarded with the utmost vigilance, and it was with difficulty that even his wife was permitted to visit him. All the circumstances connected with his case, indeed, suggest that there were secrets behind it into which it would have been impolitic to enquire too curiously. Ochiltree was in the Tolbooth by the beginning of November 1631 (p. 348), yet even in July, 1632, his trial had not begun, though again and again the date had been fixed and arrangements made for it. At length, on September 6th, 1632, a letter from Charles was tabled at the Council board, in which we find the following mysterious passage. "Having at this tyme amongst some other things concerning our service in that our kingdome imparted our mynde at lenth tuicheing the Lord Ochiltrie unto our right trustie and weilbelovit cousine and counsellour, the Erl of Stratherne [President of the Council], we have to that purpose givin directioun to him to signifie our pleasure unto yow, willing that suche ane course be takin with the said Lord Uchiltrie as the said Erle sall acquaint yow frome us" (p. 538). At this point, so far as the present volume is concerned, the business ends, and we need not anticipate the sequel.

In connection with the fortunes of great Scottish families two other items have to be noted, both of which excited considerable interest during the period before us. On August 26th, 1631, William, Earl of Menteith, Lord Kilpont, Lord Justice-General and President of the Council, received the patent of the Earldom of Strathearn in virtue of his descent from David, Earl of Strathearn, son of Robert II. (p. 316). The granting of this patent has both a political and a literary significance. It raised the old question whether the descendants of Robert II. by his first wife, Elizabeth Mure, were not the true heirs of the Scottish Crown, and it prompted Drummond of Hawthornden to write his "Considerations to the King" and, in all probability, his "History of Scotland during the reigns of the Five Jameses" (Professor Masson, Drummond of Hawthornden, p. 221-223). The second item, if we may judge by the number of entries

relating to it, occupied more of the Council's attention than any other business throughout our period. This was the "rehabilitation" of Francis Stewart, son of the madcap Earl of Bothwell, who had been forfeited by James VI. for his repeated acts of sedition in the years preceding James's accession to the English Crown. The son had regained James's favour, and had received licence to enjoy whatever lands and titles he might acquire by "his owin industrie and pains"; and now Charles took the further step of restoring to him certain of the lands of the forfeited Earldom. The difficulty, however, was to decide which and what portion of the lands should be restored. Most of them had gone to the Earls of Buccleuch and Roxburgh, and the great business of the Council was to settle what could be legally taken from these noblemen and assigned to Stewart. In the final Act of Rehabilitation by the Parliament of 1633 the result of the investigation is definitively summed up, and by Charles's decret-arbitral Stewart was reinstated in his paternal possessions. But, says Scot of Scotstarvet, "male parta pejus dilabuntur; for he never brooked them, nor was anything the richer, since they accresced to his creditors, and now are in possession of one Dr. Seaton." It is the son of this Francis Stewart, it will be remembered, who figures as the Bothwell of "Old Mortality."

State of the Western Isles.

It was only by the constant reassertion of its authority that the government succeeded in maintaining a fair degree of order in the Highlands and the Western Islands. From a letter of Charles (10th December, 1631) addressed to the Council we might conclude that the Isles were relapsing into the condition which had existed previous to the "Band and Statutes of Icolmkill" (1609). On information supplied to him by the Bishop of the Isles Charles could write that "there is no order amongst thame [the Islanders] for increassing ather of religioun or civill policie." To remedy this state of things he recommended the measures which had been so successfully adopted by his father: in the following April or May the Council was to summon the leading chiefs, and, if need were, to detain them till he himself should come to Scotland. The notorious Captain of Clanranald was to be specially dealt with, as he had again been giving conspicuous proof of his contempt for authority. When the Bishop of the Isles had attempted to lay hold on a priest who was entertained by certain of Clanranald's following, the attempt had been repulsed with violence offered to his own person (p. 389). The general state of the Highlands was equally unsatisfactory; and in their case there is abundant evidence to show that the government had good reason to be disquieted at the general prevalence of crime and disorder. In renewing the Earl of Moray's commission for securing peace in the North, Charles declared that he did so by reason of "the insolenceis and oppressions daylie committed" in that part of the country (p. 3). We turn the page and find how this state of things came to be. We have there a long list of outlaws, mainly in Strathdon, who are represented as making light of their sentence and contemptuously refusing to appear before the constituted legal authorities. There was a simple explanation of their audacity: they were in the following of the great Marquis of Huntly, who had so often and so successfully made his own terms with the Privy Council (p. 4). But the contempt of law was not confined to the domains of Huntly; in Menteith and Strathearn there had "brokin louse . . . numbers of brokin and lawlesse lymmars of the Clan Gregour and other brokin clans in the Hielands, who by the force of his Majesteis auctoritie wer some few yeeres bygane reduced to the obedience of law and justice." To suppress this "infamous byke of lawlesse lymmars" a special Commission was appointed with powers, which, if they could have been enforced, would have left few of the "lymmars" remaining (p. 100). Now, as in the past, however, there was the same difficulty in bringing the forces of order to bear in the Highlands: from motives of self-interest many chieftains connived at acts of violence in which they might themselves have no direct part. In these circumstances the Council could but re-enact two statutes which had been passed in 1567 and 1594 for the maintenance of law in the Highlands and Borders. All "landlords and balleis" of the lands in these districts were to find caution for the good behaviour of all persons in their "obedience" (p. 198). As will afterwards be seen, even this stringent regulation failed to take effect, and it became more and more apparent that the government of Charles did not inspire the same respect as that of his father.

James Grant
in Daltaleis.

Among all the Highland outlaws of the times James Grant in Daltaleis was the most notorious and dreaded. His exploits resounded throughout Lowlands as well as Highlands, and his name was on all men's lips. He belonged to the Grants of Carron, and his outlawry dated as far back as 1618, when he slew Patrick Grant in Lettache, of the Grants of Ballindalloch. The result of the homicide was a deadly feud between the two families of the Grants, in which James of Daltaleis made himself the terror of the district. Commission after commission had been issued for his arrest, but he had eluded every attempt at his capture, and, when the present volume opens, we find him still at large with a price of 5000 marks on his head (p. 92). The next document referring to Grant is a jubilant letter of Council to Charles announcing that the desperado had at length been taken. Six of his band had been captured and six slain, and he himself had received six arrow shots (p. 99). Conveyed to Edinburgh, he was lodged in the Castle, where, after the lapse of some time, he was made secure in irons (pp. 164, 204). It was the general conviction that it had not been without powerful support that Grant had so long been able to remain at large; and the Council apparently took every precaution both to keep him safe, and to provide that his trial should throw as much light as possible on all the circumstances of his career. When he was brought from the Castle to the Laigh Council House for examination, it was ordered that the bailies of the town should form his guard and that no one should be allowed to speak to him by the way (p. 258). In Grant's case, however, as in so many others, the suspicion arises that there were influences at work which were not in the interests of pure justice. It might have been expected that a criminal, whose misdeeds had been so flagrant, would be summarily disposed of; but in point of fact his trial was again and again postponed, and it was not till a full year after his capture that it was found "expedient"

to examine him regarding his "assistants, abbetters, and hounders out." It is further significant in connection with this resolution that he was not to be put on his oath and that no record was to be made of his deposition (p. 454). This decision was taken on March 27th, 1632, and the next entry (October 16th, 1632) regarding Grant informs us that he had made his escape from the Castle. Great, it would seem, was the indignation of the Council and great its zeal for his recapture. A vehement proclamation informed the lieges of the crowning "misdemeanour" of the "tratour, James Grant," and set forth a "pourtraite of his bodie" which might lead to his apprehension. Here is the picture of the man whose exploits leave far behind those of the Rob Roy of history, if not of romance. He was "of little stature, bald headed, braid faced, faire culloured, broun bairded, weake eyed, bow hoghed, fatt bellied, and about fiftie yeeres of age." From another source (Spalding, History of the Troubles in England and Scotland) we learn how his escape was accomplished. Enclosed in what was supposed to be a cask of butter sent in to him by his wife, he found a rope by means of which he descended the walls of the Castle. Every preparation had been made to ensure the success of his attempt. His natural son was ready to receive him when he descended, and the two in company made direct for the North. After lying sick in the woods near Denny for nine days, Grant finally disappeared in the Highlands, there to resume his career at a later day. The proceedings that followed Grant's escape strengthen the suspicion that more exalted persons than his wife had been concerned in it. After so successfully playing her part she also made her way to the North and sought the protection of the Marquis of Huntly, though on what "pretext" the Marquis professed to be quite unaware (p. 561). By the order of the Council she was conveyed to the Bishop of Aberdeen, who was instructed to cross-examine her and report her deposition. Though "sollemnelie sworne," she denied all art and part in her husband's escape, and even sought to mislead the authorities by suggesting that he had probably gone to visit his daughter in Ireland (pp. 576-578). With this mendacious statement the record of Grant closes in the present volume.

The Burning of Fren-draught.

But, as has already been said, the most notable incident in the history of the North was the famous tragedy, known as the "Burning of Fren draught." The relation of the Council to this incident consists in its protracted endeavour to discover the perpetrators of the crime, if crime it was. For the attainment of this object two means were adopted, the record of which occupies a considerable proportion of the present volume. A special Commission was appointed to visit the spot and to report on the question whether the fire was intentional or the result of accident; and, as a further means of discovering the truth, a number of persons, who were supposed to possess information regarding the unhappy business, were brought before the Council and subjected to long and searching examination. Under these two heads the numerous entries in the Register referring to the subject may be conveniently grouped. These entries have more than once been consulted by writers who have dealt with the incident,¹ but with the whole material now before us it can be treated with greater fulness of detail. Before noting the most important references to the subject, however, it is necessary to give a brief account of the tragedy itself.

In the Introduction to the preceding volume of the Register reference was made to the bitter feud between the Crichtons of Fren draught and the Gordons of Rothiemay. In connection with the feud it will be sufficient to note its history from the beginning of 1630—the year of the Burning. On the first day of that year an encounter took place between a party of the Gordons and a party of the Crichtons, in which the former lost William Gordon of Rothiemay and the latter, George Gordon, brother of James Gordon of Lesmoir. Through the mediation of the Marquis of Huntly James Crichton, the Laird of Fren-draught, made his peace with the Gordons by paying the sum of 50,000 merks to the widowed Lady of Rothiemay. On the 27th September of the same year there befell another incident which leads us directly to the story of the Burning. In the fray which had chanced in the preceding January the Laird of Fren-draught had been assisted by a gentleman named John Meldrum, who, not considering himself sufficiently rewarded for his efforts, indemnified himself by stealing two of Fren-draught's horses. Having heard that Meldrum had taken refuge with his brother-in-law, John Leslie of Pitcaple, the Laird of Fren-draught went in search of him, and, in the meeting that ensued, John Leslie, son of the Laird of Pitcaple, was shot through the arm. With the intention of again procuring Huntly's good offices, Fren-draught sought that noble at his Castle of the Bog, whither he was followed by the indignant father of the wounded man. Pitcaple did not receive the satisfaction he desired, and left the castle in no pleasant temper. Detaining Fren-draught for the night, Huntly sent him home the next day accompanied by his son, John, Viscount Melgum, and several of his own retainers. At the invitation of Fren-draught the party agreed to remain over-night in his Tower. "They wor weill intertaynde," writes the chronicler, "soutpit merrelie, and to bed went joyfullie." About midnight, after all had retired, the fire broke out, six persons were burnt, including the Viscount Melgum and the young Laird of Rothiemay who had accompanied him to Fren-draught.¹

As the clearest and most succinct method of presenting the various entries relating to the Burning of Fren-draught they are here arranged in tabular form and in chronological order. It will be remembered that the tragedy took place on the morning of the 8th of October, 1630:—

November 2, 1630.—James Crichton, Laird of Fren-draught, appears before the Council and comes under obligation to abide investigation into the burning of his Tower of Fren-draught (p. 49).

November 25.—Alexander Leslie, brother to John Leslie, elder of Pitcable, John Meldrum in Reidhall, Robert Wilsoun in Dykeside of Auchterles, and Robert Ridfurde in Meikle Wartill, have been charged at the instance of the Laird of Frendraught to appear for trial before the Justice “for the treasonable burning of the hous of Frendraught” (p. 72). The John Meldrum here mentioned was the same who had stolen the two horses from Frendraught. He was the only person who was executed on the charge of having been party to the Burning.

November 30.—Commission for the arrest of John Toshe, Thomas Jose, John Gibb, and Robert Bewlie. These persons held respectively the offices of master of the household, steward, gardener, and cook to Frendraught (p. 74).

December 7.—Supplication by Thomas Meldrum of Iden and his son, William Meldrum, for protection that they may appear before the Justice anent the burning of Frendraught (p. 80).

—— The Laird of Banff becomes caution that James Clerk, James Toshe, and Thomas Joyce, all servitors of Frendraught, will remain within the burghs of Edinburgh and the Canongate, and appear before the Council as often as they are summoned (p. 81).

December 9.—Examination of witnesses postponed till January 21, 1631 (p. 84).

December 16.—Mr. John Horne and James Clerk, chamberlains to Frendraught, allowed to return home (p. 94).

—— Thomas Meldrum of Iden becomes caution in 3,000 merks for the indemnity of James Crichton, his wife, children, and household (p. 96).

December 21.—The trial and torture of Margaret Wood, a servant-girl, postponed till January 20, 1631 (p. 97).

December 23.—Commission to George, Lord Gordon, and others to produce certain persons for examination anent their knowledge of the Burning (p. 103).

—— Commission to the Bishop of Dunblane and others to examine John Meldrum (p. 105).

January 11, 1632.—Commission to the Bishop of Aberdeen to examine Lord Forbes upon the interrogatories given in by the Laird of Frendraught (p. 112).

January 13.—Supplication by the Laird of Frendraught that the trial fixed for January 21, 1631, be postponed. The Council postpones the trial till June 15 (p. 115).

—— Deposition by Elizabeth Strachan, Lady Blackhall, anent Margaret Wood (p. 607).

February 1.—Margaret Wood to be put to the torture of the boot the following morning (p. 130).

—— Various depositions anent the Burning (pp. 609–611).

February 2.—Deposition by Margaret Wood and others (pp. 611–616). Wood’s deposition was given under torture.

—— Laird of Frendraught becomes caution in 100,000 merks that his wife and the Laird of Banff will remain in Edinburgh till they are allowed to depart (p. 135).

February 3.—John Toshe and John Meldrum to be put to the torture if their answers be not satisfactory (p. 135).

February 5, 1631.—The torture of John Toshe and John Meldrum to be postponed till further evidence be forthcoming against them (p. 136).

- February 10, 1631.*—Margaret Wood to be tried for perjury (p. 141).
- February 15.*—Ministers appointed to visit her in prison, and endeavour “to make her sensible of her sinfull estate” (p. 143).
- April 1.*—Margaret Wood to be scourged and banished (p. 200).
- April 4.*—Commission appointed to visit the Tower of Frendraught and investigate the origin of the fire (p. 207).
- April 20.*—The Commissioners report that they are unable to determine whether the fire was accidental or not, but that it could not have taken place “without aide from within” (p. 214).
- April 26.*—At the request of Charles a special Committee of the Privy Council is to be appointed to inquire into the origin of the fire (p. 320).
- January 9, 1632.*—Letter of Charles from which it appears that, owing to the pressure of other business, the Committee has been unable to direct its attention to the Burning of Frendraught (p. 402).
- June 5.*—Letter from Charles requiring the Council to devote one day a week to the Burning (p. 489).
- Another letter from Charles requiring the Council to put John Meldrum to the torture (p. 490).
- July 5.*—Commission appointed to try John Toshe, and to apply torture if necessary (p. 505).
- November 20.*—Petition by the Marquis of Huntly for the postponement of the trial of John Toshe (p. 569).

Such are the significant entries in the Register which record the action of the Council in connection with the Burning of Frendraught. The protracted nature of the proceedings is the first fact that strikes us. The first entry above noted falls under November 2nd, 1630, and the last under November 20th, 1632. As the result of all the Council's investigations only one definite conclusion had been reached: the girl, Margaret Wood, had been found guilty of perjury in giving her evidence, and was sentenced to be scourged and banished. Regarding the two persons, John Toshe and John Meldrum, whose guilt was most strongly suspected, the Council was still in doubt, though at a later day Meldrum was justly or unjustly to be charged with the crime and to suffer for it. As far, therefore, as the evidence of this portion of the Register goes, we are left completely in the dark as to the origin of the disaster. From the report of the special Commission, as from the depositions of the different witnesses, no conclusion can be drawn as to whether the fire was the result of accident or deliberate intention, and in this atmosphere of mystery the question will probably remain. In connection with the application of torture one or two interesting facts emerge. It is evident that the Council had no liking for this method of extracting the truth, and only in extreme cases had recourse to it. It would seem, also, that when torture was applied it was the unwritten law of the Council that all its members, or, at least, all within call, should be present. From a letter of the Council to Charles we learn in what light it regarded the practice. In appointing the Commission for the investigation of the origin of the fire Charles had expressed the wish that the Commission should have the power to apply torture if it was found necessary. To this proposal the Council opposed two objections: such a power would be an infringement of a privilege which belonged only to itself as the supreme judicatory of the kingdom, and it would, moreover, be a "dangerous preparative" which might have evil results in the future (p. 435). At a later period of the national history the Privy Council did not exhibit the same indisposition to make full use of its privilege.

Cases of Disorder.

The examples of lawlessness above noted were confined to the north of the Forth; in the Lowlands, also, we find several instances of audacious defiance of authority. As specimens of such cases we may refer to the proceedings in connection with the Place of Touch and the manor of Whitekirk (pp. 32, 33). The judgment of the Council in the case of an atrocious incident reported from the Shetland Islands carries us back to a remoter period of Scottish history. A certain Walter Feya was charged with having "verie cruellie cutted out the lugges of ane poore woman's heid," and the sheriffs of the Orkneys and the Shetlands consulted the Council as to what punishment should be inflicted on the perpetrator of such an act. The answer of the "supreme judicatory of the kingdom" was that Feya's own ears should receive similar treatment if he were found to be guilty (p. 140). At p. 223 we have the complaint of the minister of Dunscore regarding an unruly parishioner, one John Moffat at Craigenputtock, who had long been under excommunication for "disobedience to the kirk." One Sunday, when the minister was baptising a child, Moffat, accompanied by one of his tenants, entered the church, seized the laver, and "slang" its contents over the church. This was but one misdemeanour on the part of Moffat and his attendant, as we are told that they were in the habit of breaking down the wall of the churchyard, feeding their cattle and sheep within the same, and so "defiling and abusing the churchyard with the dung of their bestial as if it were a fold or byre" (p. 223). In connection with this case it may be noted that kirks and ministers were not infrequently the objects of unusually outrageous acts of violence. At p. 89 we have the account of a scene in the "Little Kirk" in Edinburgh, in which two prominent personages played the chief parts. On Sunday, December 12th, 1630, the Laird of Fren draught, of whom we hear so much, was "sitting quietly and peaceably" in that place, awaiting the beginning of the service, when John, Bishop of the Isles, entered and made for the Laird "with ane angrie and boasteous countenance." Fren draught, according to his own account, made way for the angry bishop, who instead of passing on raised his fist with the intention of bringing it down on Fren draught's head. In his heat, however, the bishop missed his blow, but succeeded in knocking off his intended victim's hat, and this in "the sight of the haill people conveened in the kirk, who with great greefe recented the scandalous profanatioun of thair kirk upon the Lord's holie Sabboth." The Council sympathised with Fren draught in his complaint, but, as his assailant was "ane ecclesiastical persoun," they handed him over to the Archbishop of St. Andrews. The bishop, it should be said, brought a counter-complaint against Fren draught, but the Council was of opinion that he failed to prove any part of his case.—A mysterious affair, the details of which are not fully recorded, was the burning of the house of Mr. David Leitch, minister at Dundrennan. The fire took place "under silence of night," and there was a strong presumption that it was not the result of accident, but the work of certain excommunicated persons. In this case, as in that of the Burning of Fren draught, the Council appears to have been helpless from the contradictory nature of the evidence. It took its usual step of appointing a commission of enquiry, but the result does not appear in the present volume (pp. 257, 258, 268, 396, 438). But the most notable case of insubordination out of the Highlands was that of Patrick Halket of Lumquhinnans, aided and abetted by his family and dependents. On pp. 485-487 we receive the following information regarding the proceedings of the Halkets. For "twelve or fourteen years" they had "maisterfullie and violentlie kepted and possest" the place and lands of Lumquhinnans "in contempt of law and justice." On the 5th of March, 1630, they had been denounced rebels and put to the horn. As they paid no heed to this intimation the sheriff of Fife was empowered to effect their arrest and to eject them from what was virtually a stronghold. The sheriff entrusted one of his deputies with the execution of the law; and that officer, accompanied by several attendants, proceeded to the Place of Lumquhinnans. The Halkets were as undismayed as ever; they had laid in a fresh store of provisions, weapons and ammunition; they had erected a "sconse" near the house in which they had planted their guns; and had strengthened their garrison by the enlistment of a number of soldiers lately returned from service on the Continent. When the depute summoned them to surrender, he was greeted with "blasphemous words"; "they cared not altho the devill tooke thame, for they behoved once to dee." As the depute had not received warrant of fire and sword, he could only withdraw and report his ineffectual errand. In these circumstances there was but one course open to the Council—to empower the sheriff to raise the lieges and carry the Place of Lumquhinnans by assault. This warrant was granted on May 2nd, 1632, and on June 7th, the sheriff-depute of Fife was able to present the two brothers, Andrew and John Halket, before the Council (p. 492). In this case, there was no delay of justice: on the 12th of June the brothers were sentenced to banishment for life (p. 495).

Miscellaneous. At p. 236 we find notice of a custom which throws a curious light on the observance of the post-Reformation Sunday. In the dioceses of Aberdeen and Moray it had been the practice of messengers and other officials to announce their commissions at the church doors during the time of divine service. The effect of these proceedings was somewhat discomposing both to the preacher and his congregation. When the official was at the door, every worshipper supposed that he might have a special interest in the intimation about to be made, and rushed out to hear it. The Council was of opinion that this custom was "to the great offence of God, scandall of the Kirk, and contempt of all good order"; but the ordinance which it issued does not give proof of excessive zeal for the decorum of public worship. It was forbidden "to execute anie letters or precepts of whatsoever nature or qualitie upon the Sabbath day except onlie warnings for removing and redemption of lands, inhibitiouns of teinds, warnings to compeir before the Commissioners for the Surrenders and Teinds and charges of horning quhilks be the warrand thairof ar ordained to be execute at parish kirks." Attention may be called to two other entries, both of which, however, are well-known to those interested in the subjects to which they refer. The one contains a proposal of the magistrates of Edinburgh "for the ease and conveniencie of the Estaits and credite of the kingdome to build and raise ane Parliament hous and Counsel hous and Session hous" (p. 448); and the other a letter from Charles recommending the foundation of a "College of Physicians" (p. 69).

I have again to thank the Rev. Henry Paton, M.A., for his valuable assistance in the preparation of this volume.

Charge having been given to the said Marquis and his son, and they compearing as defenders, together with the said John Grant, apparent of Ballindalloche, for himself and the other pursuers, and witnesses having been examined, the Lords find "that the peace and quyet of the countrie necessarilie requires that the saids Marqueis of Huntlie and Lord Gordoun, as being the onelie men of power, freindship and autoritie within the bounds foresaids, aucht and sould be burdenned for exhibitoun of the saids rebels, seing the wodsetters ar not of power nor auctoritie to doe the same," and they give order to this effect.

Complaint by John Toft, shepherd, against James Mouat for assault.

Complaint by John Toft, shepherd in West Gordoun, as follows:—
 On April last James Mouat of Fawsyde, armed with a sword staff, and accompanied by "ane great mastish dog," came to the Mains of West Gordoun, where the complainer was peaceably pasturing his goods, and hounded the dog at him. The complainer turned to defend himself from the dog, when James Mouat came "behind his backe, drew his sword and strake him in at the craig thairwith," and having given him "manie others bloodie straikes," left him lying for dead. The pursuer compearing, but the defender not, the Lords ordain him to be put to the horn.

Complaint by Mr. John M^cKeinzie, student in St Andrewes, David Mitchell and John Finnell, common servants there, and Robert Wilsoun, servitor to the said Mr. John, as follows:—On April last, Mr. Alexander Gray, indweller in St Andrewes, came to Mr. John M^cKeinzie's study in the town of St Andrewes, he being for the time at Edinburgh, and there the said Mr. Alexander Gray, and some others with him, broke up his coffers, took out his books and other property within the said study, "and verie cruellie buffeted the saids David Mitchell, John Finnell, and Robert Wilsone, with his hands and feit, to the effusioun of his blood, and specialie caused the said Robert Wilsone to gushe furth blood at the mouth and nose." The pursuers compearing by John M^cClie, their procurator, and the defender also being present, and the probation being referred to his oath of verity, on his deponing that the study in question was his own, and that the other parts of the complaint were not true, the Lords assoilzie him.

Complaint by William Wilson, elder, in Monkrig and others on the ground that the caution of 500 merks demanded by Thomas Shields is beyond their quality.

Complaint by William Wilson, elder, in Monkrig, William Wilson, elder, his son, John Dickiesone there, Andrew Marke there, William Sinclair and John Middlemist in Hadintoun, as follows:—They have been charged at the instance of Thomas Scheills in Sandersdaes, Margaret Bartismow, his wife, John, Alexander, and Thomas Scheills, his sons, and Bessie and Isobel Scheills, his daughters, to find caution for their indemnity, each in 500 merks. This sum is far beyond their quality, they being "bot simple yeomen and meilmakers, living be thair handie labour," and so in terms of the Act of Parliament limited to £40, and they crave modification thereof accordingly. The pursuers compearing by Mr. Alexander Hepburn, writer in Edinburgh, and the defenders not compearing, the Lords meanwhile suspend the letters issued against them, and ordain the caution to be modified in each case to 100 merks.

Complaint by Andrew Sinclair and Alexander Hay, musicians of his Majesty's Chapel Royal, against Edward Kellie, who refuses to pay the complainers their share of 6000 merks which he had received to be distributed among the musicians of the said Chapel.

Complaint by Andrew Sinclair and Alexander Hay, two of the musicians of his Majesty's Chapel Royal, as follows:—Edward Kellie, one of the musicians of the said chapel, received from his Majesty's Receivers, by royal warrant, the sum of 6000 merks to be distributed among the musicians of the said chapel according to their service. The complainers, "finding no upright meaning in the said Edward," by their Lordships' direction caused charge him to compear before the Council to be ordained to pay to the complainers their proportion of the said sum, but as soon as he received the charge he departed to England. On his return recently the complainers dealt with him both personally and by means of the Bishop of Dumblane, Dean of the Chapel, to pay to each of them 500 merks as their respective shares of the sum foresaid, seeing it is appointed by the said Bishop to be divided among twelve of their number, but he refuses to do so unless he be compelled. Pursuers and defenders compearing and being heard, the Lords ordain the said Edward Kellie to make payment to the pursuers in terms of the direction of the Bishop of Dumblane, which is to be set down in writing.

Holyrood House, 10th August 1630. Supplication by Margaret Guthrie, who is "not past ten years of age," that she be not imprisoned for the debts of her deceased father.

Decreta, January 1630. February 1631. Fol. 101, b.

Supplication by Margaret Guthrie, daughter to the deceased Hercules Guthrie, merchant burges of Edinburgh, as follows:—Her said father died, "leaving nothing behind him bot ane great burdein of debts." Her uncle, Harie Guthrie, having become her tutor at law, he, without consulting her friends, served her heir to her father and has thus brought her under the danger of his whole debts. His creditors have now obtained several decrees against the supplicant, "who is bot ane young pupill, not past ten yeers of age," and have not only apprised her father's movables, but have raised captions against her personally, so that she is like to be put in prison, "to her utter wracke and undoing, and to the disappointing and frustrating her of the benefite of vertuous education in literature and others vertuous exercises quhilks are the onelie hopes left unto her whairupon to build her fortunes; and if she wer come to the age of twelffe yeeres whairthrow she might choose curatours, she would revoke the service foresaid and renunce all benefite she can clame to her said father as air to him." She accordingly craves their Lordships' protection. The Lords "finding it ane hard mater that pupills who ar altogidder ignorant of thair parents debts sall be troubled by captiouns," etc., supersede all such processes against her person only for her father's debts till she reach the age of twelve years.

Complaint by Robert Douglas of Blackerstone against John Stewart of Coldingham, whom he accuses of violently carrying off his victual.

Complaint by Robert Dowglas of Blaikester, as follows:—John Stewart of Coldinghame, for relief of certain cautionries in which he engaged for him, disponed to him the lands of Coldinghame, and he and the deceased William Dowglas of Blaikerstoun, his father-in-law, donator to the escheat of the said John Stewart, have been in possession of these lands and the rents thereof for the past ten years without challenge or interruption, until last year, when the said John Stewart, unmindful of his duty and of the great trouble and distress which the complainer sustains on his account, came accompanied with a number of rebels to the lands and barnyard of Coldinghame and violently carried off 30 chalders of victual. He intends also to do the same this year and so ruin the complainer unless the Lords protect him from such disorderly courses. Pursuer and defender both compearing and being heard, the Lords, "understanding the present necessitie of the said Johnne Stewart and that he hes nothing whairwith to interteane himselfe and his familie this present yeere," the pursuer being in possession of his whole estate, with consent of the pursuer allow the said John Stewart to collect and lead the teinds of Stithell this present year only, and discharge him of all meddling with the teinds of Coldinghame or molesting the pursuer in his peaceable possession thereof under the penalty of being accounted and dealt with as a disturber of the peace.

and Amisfeild for the trial of the supplicant upon some criminal information lodged against him by John Maxwell of Logane, Steward-depute of Kirkcudbright, viz. the alleged marking of a sheep belonging to James Corsebie at the Bridgend of Dumfries. The supplicant is quite willing to undergo his trial before any indifferent judge, as he is not conscious of his guilt of any such crime, but seeing that Susanna Gordoun, spouse to the said John Maxwell, "is cousennesse germane to the said Laird of Amisfeild and so stands within degrees dependant to him, and the said Laird hes kythed him selffe verie partiall in this mater aganis the said supplicant in so farre as not onelie did he subscriue ane testificat aganis him, bot also caused his sones and servants assist the said Johne Maxwell at the bar aganis him," the supplicant has just cause to suspect the said Laird of Amisfeild, who should not sit as his judge in this matter. He therefore craves that the Lords would appoint the Viscount of Drumlanrig, the Lord Dalzell, James Gordoun of Buthill, and Robert M^cBrair of Almigill, or any one of them, in place of the said Laird of Amisfeild. The Lords, "considering that the cryme whairupon the said supplicant is to be persewed is treasonable, seing he is ane landit man, and that be the lawes of the kingdome thift in a landit man is treason," appoint that the supplicant's trial for the fore-said crime shall take place before his Majesty's Justice and his deutes within the Tolbooth of Edinburgh, where all parties interested "may assure thameselfes of indifferent and equall justice;" and they ordain the supplicant to find caution in 500 merks in the Books of Adjournal to compear there for his trial on fifteen days warning. This caution being found the Lords discharge the former judges and commissioners appointed for this matter from all further procedure therein.

Complaint by Thomas Lamb, messenger, as follows:—On 19th July last, in obedience to a charge given him at the instance of Sir James Balfoure, Lyon King of Arms, he appeared before the said Lyon and exhibited his "booke of injunctiouns and his admissioun, togidder with his blasoun, as alsua ane band whairin Sir Robert Fairlie of Braid become cautioner for the said compleaner for faithfull discharge of his office, and desyred ane sight of the new injunctiouns gevin to the messengers to be advised thairwith." He expected to have received back his blazon, but the Lord Lyon and his Clerk of Court refused it until the complainer paid ten merks of entry, and gave bond for a yearly annuity of £6, which he was never in use to pay. Charge having been given to the said Lord Lyon and George Watson, his clerk, to compear in the premises, with certification that if they failed it should be lawful to the complainer "to use his office in tyme comming ad culpam vel ad vitam, and both pursuer and defenders compearing, the said Sir James for instructing his right to the said annuity produced a number of bonds granted by messengers to his predecessors for payment of the said annuity. The Lords having examined these and the book of injunctiouns

Supplication by the bailies and Council of Anstruther for themselves and the inhabitants as follows:—The bridge of their burgh is now "so ruinous and decayed that in tyme of storme or spait there is no saulfe passage at the said bridge, and if it be not helped and repaired before this approaching winter the same will totallie decay and fall down to the great hinder of passingers travelling that way, there being no other saulfe passage within twa myles of the toun; and in respect of the great charges the supplicants have beene at in the reparatioun of thair harberie, ar not able to reparaire thair decayed bridge; and forder thair losses be sea hes beene so manie and ar so notour that the best people of thair toun, who boore the most part of the commoun burdenis of the same, ar now wracked and undone." They crave an Act of Council authorising them to uplift certain duties from all horse and foot passengers by the said bridge, as well as a recommendation of the said work to the country. The Lords, finding the great necessity for the repair of the said bridge, recommend the same "to the benevolence and voluntarie contributioun of the inhabitants to burgh and land within the shirefdome of Fyfe, requeisting thame and everie ane of thame to showe suche proportioun of thair benevolence towards the reparatioun of the said bridge as they in thair discretioun sall thinke fitting, and to delyver the same to anie one of the bailleis of Anstruther" for the said work, this recommendation to stand in force till Whitsunday next. The Lords also authorise the said bailies of Anstruther and the collectors to be appointed by them, and for whom they will answer, for two years after the date hereof to uplift the following tolls at the said bridge or ford thereof—viz., from every foot passenger, 1d.; every horseman, 2d.; every horse load of any commodity, 4d.; and every laden cart, 8d.; the proceeds to be employed "upon the reparatioun, beitting, mending, and uphalding of the said bridge."

in Little Creichie, as follows:—William, Earl Mairshell, apprehended James Keith, in terms of a commission by their Lordships, for breaking out of his ward in the house of Dunnotter, wounding his keepers to the peril of their lives and other crimes, and has presented him to the provost and bailies of Edinburgh who have incarcerated him within their tolbooth. The supplicants, his creditors, have arrested and are to arrest him there for debts exceeding £20,000 in amount, but they are informed that the said James Keith has by some means or other purchased a “letter of protection or supersedere” for his whole debts, as well as his other crimes, which his Majesty had never granted had he known the real state of affairs. The said James intends to present this letter to their Lordships for ratification, or abruptly by virtue of some command contained therein to cause the great seal be appended thereto, and so obtain his freedom, contrary to the laws and Acts of Parliament of this kingdome against granting of protections in such cases. They therefore crave that their Lordships will refuse to grant such a protection if it be presented to them; that they will order Sir John Scot, Director of Chancery, and Mr. David Sibbald, Keeper of the Great Seal, not to expedite any such protection, and that they will discharge the provost and bailies of Edinburgh from liberating the said James Keith by virtue of any such protection. The Lords find the prayer of the petition just and reasonable and prohibit as craved the Director of Chancery, the Lord Chancellor, as principal keeper, and Mr. David Sibbald, as keeper depute of the Great Seal, from expediting or sealing such a protection, and the provost and bailies of Edinburgh from liberating the said James Keith on any such document, as they will answer at their peril.

And upoun the aucht day of October last the said Ladie Towche rancounering with Margaret Tannoch, servitric to the said compleaner, who wes bringing in some necessars for her and her familie, she for that onelie caus cruellie punsed the poore man [sic] with her hands and feit, gave her manie bauch and blae straike on diverse parts of her bodie, speciallie on the face, so that the blood gushed out at her mouth in great quantitie, and had not failed to have slaine her if some of her awin servants had not stayed her; and that same day she caused tirre the lofting and flooring abone the compleaners lardner and hes thairby so spoyled her provisioun and victualls as the same is become unusefull to the compleaner." Charge having been given to the said Lady Towche to compear, and Gabriel Blair in the Cannogait, and James Wilson in Mylneburne having been cited as witnesses, and both Lady Parkley, as pursuer, and Lady Towche, as defender, being present, the Lords, after hearing certain witnesses who failed to substantiate the charge, assoilzie Lady Towche, but declare that this decree shall not prejudice Lady Parkley in her lawful present possession of the place of Towche. The two witnesses above named, who failed to compear, were ordered to be denounced.

Complaint by Sir William Sinclare of Pentland, knight, and Elizabeth Sinclare, widow of Oliver Sinclare of Quhytkirk, as follows:—The said Elizabeth disponed her liferent right of the lands of Quhytkirk to the said Sir William, having been in possession thereof since her said husband's death. Thereafter she retired to Edinburgh "to have lived ane quyet lyfe," and appointed James Skougall, brother to Mr. John Skougall of Humble, her procurator, to go with the said Sir William to the manor place of Quhytkirk and give him possession thereof. When Peter Sinclare, brother to the said deceased Oliver, and Ewfame McCalzeane, his mother, got information of this transaction, they on with others their accomplices, armed with swords, staves and other weapons, "came under cloud and silence of night to the place of Quhytkirk, the whole yetts thair of being closed and the keys of the same being delyvered to the said James Skougall," violently broke up the said gates and doors, "rave aff the old lockes and putt on new lockes and settled thameselfes in the saids houses as if they had bene the onelie awners and proprietars thair of, brake up the yaird doores, cutt doun the growing trees, pulled aff the fruiets thair of, and verie pitifullie hes spoyled the planting of the saids yairds, and hes pryzed up sindrie cunzie stoness of the saids houses," apparently intending to destroy and demolish the same and make them unprofitable to the com-

Charge having been given to the said Peter Sinclare and Ewfame M'Calzeane, and both pursuer and defenders compearing, Sir William for instructing his right produced a charter by the said Oliver Sinclare of Quhytkirk to the said Elizabeth Sinclare then his future spouse, in liferent, of an annuity of 1400 merks upliftable from the lands and manor place of Quhytkirk with the pertinents thereof, dated 22d February 1622; and an Instrument of Sasine thereupon under the subscription of Gilbert Gray, notary, dated 23d February, bearing that sasine was givin by Robert M'Math in Quhytkirk, as bailie of Oliver Sinclare to John Pringill, servitor to John Sinclare of Hirdmistoun, as attorney of the said Elizabeth Sinclare within the "closse of Quhytkirk." He also produced a Procuratory signed by the said Elizabeth Sinclare directing the said James Skougall to go to the said manor place of Quhytkirk and give the keys thereof to the pursuer, the said procuratory being dated 7th August last. The Lords, having examined these documents and heard several witnesses, find that the defenders "violentlie dang aff the lockes of the houses lybellit and intrudit thameselffes in the possessioun thairoff," and ordain them to place the said Sir William Sinclare in possession.

Complaint by Dame Margaret Cockeburne, widow of Alexander Home of Rentoun, and Sir William Grahame of Brako, knight, now her spouse, for his interest, as follows:—She was infet in liferent in the lands of Horsley with the pertinents and teinds thereof by her late husband, and has for several years since his death enjoyed the quiet possession of the same, till lately John Home, now of Renton, son of the said Alexander, has intermeddled with the said teinds by way of spulzie, and debars the complainer from her right and possession. He has done so for the past two years, and intends to do the same this year. She has an action on the matter presently before the Lords of Council and Session, and craves that order be given for the sequestration of the teinds meanwhile. Charge having been given to the said John Home of Renton, who compeared, and the pursuers compearing by Mr. William Cranstoun, their servitor, and parties having been heard, the Lords grant a commission to Trotter, called Laird Trotter, to collect and lead the said teinds for the present year, and stack them in some neutral barnyard until it be legally determined who has right to them.

Complaint by Edward Kellie, one of the prebendaries of his Majesty's Chapel, as follows:—He has been charged at the instance of Andrew Sinclare and Alexander Hay, also prebendaries of the said Chapel, to pay to them respectively 364 merks and 32 pence, and 314 merks and 32 pence, being as they allege, the amounts due to them from a sum of 6000 merks delivered to the complainer by Adam, Bishop of Dunblane, Dean of the Chapel Royal, for distribution among the said prebendaries, and they intend to put him to the horn for disobedience. He admits having received the said sum for distribution, but states that the order to be followed therein was prescribed to him by the said Bishop in a letter, viz.—That each prebendary's rent was to be considered so that all should receive equal shares. It was found that the share of each, deducting what was given for their gowns, amounted to £240, from which there fell to be deducted the free rent of their benefices. The rent received by Andrew Sinclare is £133 6s. 8d., and this being deducted leaves only £106 13s. 4d. due to him. The rent received by Alexander Hay for his benefice is £53 6s. 8d., which being deducted leaves due to him only £186 13s. 4d. However, he has consigned the sums claimed in their Lordships' hands to be delivered to his pursuers if it be found that they are entitled to them, and craves suspension of the horning. Parties compearing and having been heard, the Lords grant suspension of the horning, and ordain James Prymrois, Clerk of the Council, to give up the consigned money to the defenders to be used by them as they please and to take their acquittance for the same.

Supplication by Sir John Scot of Newburgh, as follows :—He has been charged to appear this day before their Lordships to answer to a complaint by Andrew Scot, chirurgion, for violently intruding himself into the house of Newburgh and removing the said Andrew therefrom and "shoaring and minassing him of his lyfe." He is most willing to compear, but cannot with safety, on account of some hornings under which he lies. He therefore craves a continuation of the case till next Council day, and their Lordships' protection to enable him to appear. The Lords, considering this the most effectual way to give the said Andrew Scot satisfaction, continue the case to 2d November next and grant the supplicant protection as craved till 4th November, provided he find caution for his compearance on that day, also for the indemnity of the said Andrew Scot in the meantime, and that he will remove himself and his family from the said house of Newburgh and put the said Andrew in possession thereof if it shall be found he ought so to do, under a penalty of 2000 merks if he fail in any point thereof.

Complaint by Dame Isobel Seatoun, Countess of Perth, and Daniel Wallace, minister at Morhame, for his interest, as follows:—The said Countess _____ years since obtained a tack of the teinds of the Kirk of Morhame from the parson thereof, one condition of which was that she would secure the minister thereof in the peaceable possession of the vicarage teinds as part payment of his stipend, in terms of which tack she has ever since intromitted with the parsonage teinds till, two years ago, for the convenience of her tenants, she agreed to accept from them a money payment instead, and they permitted the said minister to uplift his vicarage teinds. They are willing to do the like this year, but Sir Robert Hepburn of Barfute, and Mr. Patrick Hepburne of Smetoun, heritors of the lands of Morhame, have not only barred the petitioners from uplifting their teinds, but also discharged the tenants from paying the silver duty to the said Countess. “that his tennents had permitted the minister to marke his teind lambes with his awne marke, he for this onelie caus threatned to remove thame, and discharged to give him anie teind, affirming that he sould fast and gett no teind of him this yeere.” The said minister bore with this wrong, but at “hay tyme” having in the course of teinding his parishioners’ hay come to Sir Robert’s tenants, they refused to allow him to do so on account of their master’s said prohibition. The minister thereupon was forced to have recourse to the said Countess, who sent George Quhytheid and Bartilmew Grainslie, her servants, with a notary on 13th August last to assist the minister in his lawful teinding, but while they were teinding some hay on Sir Robert’s lands of Northrig and Standingstane, he, with Sir Michael Prestoun and others, his tenants, armed with lances and swords, came to them “and threatned thame if they teinded anie there.” The Countess’s servants, having modestly reminded him of the late proclamation discharging all persons from leading teinds who were not in the habit of doing so for some years past or warranted for that effect by the Commissioners for the Surrenders, and further that if they had been inclined to use force they could have done so by their friendship in Lothian, “the said Sir Robert replied that if 500 of the best of Scotland had beene with thame they sould not gett that teind except they got it over his bellie.” He thereupon went to the lands of Pleuchefeild, which do not belong to him, and violently seized a large quantity of the minister’s teind which was standing thereon. Upon their going to another field of Sir Robert’s to proceed with their teinding, he followed them thither also with the like threats, so that they were forced to desist, and, moreover, he and his said brother avow that they will do the like in regard to the parsonage teinds of the said Countess. Pursuer compearing and passing from the pursuit of the Laird of Smetoun, and Sir Robert Hepburne, defender, being also present and admitting the prohibition given by him to his tenants, but alleging that he knew nothing of the said proclamation, the Lords, judging this alleged ignorance somewhat improbable, in respect of his confession, ordain him to pay a fine of 200 merks to the Treasurer, Depute Treasurer and Receivers of his Majesty’s Rents, to be warded in the tolbooth of Edinburgh till he pay the same, to find caution acted in their Lordship’s books to restore the vicarage teinds to the minister, and to allow the said Countess to uplift her parsonage teinds or else pay her the money value, and to find lawburrows to the said minister in £1000. The said minister is also ordained to find lawburrows to him in 500 merks.

Supplication by Sir John Home of Blacader, knight, as follows:—The King has been pleased to appoint him Sheriff-principal of Berwick for the following year, and he has "frequent and urgent bussines with Sir James Home of Eckills, knight, and Sir David Home of Wedderburne," he and his estate being burdened heavily as cautioner for them, and measures are being taken for disposing of portions of their estates for his relief. For this purpose it is necessary they should meet frequently together, and he has certain information that in his capacity as Sheriff he will be charged with captions for the apprehension of the said Sir James and Sir David Home. That his business may proceed he craves that their Lordships would grant him an immunity from the said charges of caption, with their licence to intercommune with these gentlemen during his period of office. The Lords, however, only grant him this iberty until the 20th of November next.

Supplication by Francis Dryver, son of Charles Dryver, merchant in Birsto, as follows:—His father holds a letter of marque from his Majesty for the pursuit of the common enemy, and being in the dischage of his commission with a great warship, and the petitioner with him, they were driven by stress of weather into the river of Clyde. He and his company to the number of fifteen or sixteen persons having landed for the purpose of obtaining provisions and fresh water, they were first apprehended and imprisoned by Lord Sempill on suspicion of being pirates, but he finding no ground for this sent them to the Earl of Linlithgow, Lord Admiral, by whom they have been kept in ward for a long space, though they are true and loyal subjects, and the said Earl can find nothing in them to the contrary. They therefore crave that their Lordships would liberate them, so that they may go where they please with their ship and goods. The Lord Admiral having been heard as to certain wrongs committed by the petitioners upon certain persons, for which they had been detained in ward, the Lords, finding that the alleged wrongs "wer not verie considerable nor of great moment, and that they had sufficientlie suffered for what they had offendit in that kynde," commanded the Lord Admiral to set them free and suffer them to pass where they please with their ship and goods.

Complaint by Margaret Bruce, spouse to Andrew Dunbar in Nether Blarie, and the said Andrew for his interest, as follows:—William Dunbar of Brako, Janet Kinnarde, his spouse, and Patrick Dunbar of Kilboyack, having a deadly hatred against the said Margaret Bruce, and resolving to take her life, in June last hounded out Alexander Dunbar, son of the said William, armed with a "great battoun" to lie in wait for her at some places near her dwelling. Knowing that on the 15th of that month she would be at Kinlosse about her lawful business, they sent the said Alexander to the Mure of Tarrass, "where he lay on his wombe in ane quyet part of the said mure, and, perceaving the honest woman comming by in ane peaceable and quyet maner her alone, he rose out of his lurking hole and, er ever she was awar," pursued her with the said baton, "gave her moe than twentie blae and bloodie straiques on the head, shoulders, armes and other parts of her bodie to the effusion of her blood and perrell of her lyffe," and would have murdered her if Patrick Kinnaird of Covine, happening to come that way at the time, had not succoured her. She has since lain bedfast in great pain and peril for a quarter of a year. Charge having been given to the parties above mentioned as complained upon, and slew her said husband "by ane straike on the bellie with his awin whinger quhilk she drew frome his belt," of which stroke he died within an hour or two thereafter. She was taken by the Sheriff deputes "with the bloodie hand," and having been tried and convicted by an assize, doom was about to be pronounced, when Mr. Thomas Ramsay, minister at Dumfries, interposed and earnestly intreated "for ane short continuatioun of the doome becaus she wes distracted and prayed for publictly in the kirk this yeere bygane or thairby, and he wes to deale with her and to draw her to ane more calme and sattled dispositioun and to embrace her death with that Christiane resolutioun quhilk wes fitting." To this desire the said deputes yielded, "being glade to doe anie thing that might bring the poore creature to a trew sense and feeling of her sinne." Now the time of the Sheriff's privilege has passed, and he is informed that he cannot pronounce sentence upon the said Agnes for this slaughter without their Lordships' warrant, and this he accordingly craves. The Lords grant warrant to the said Sheriff and his deputes to pronounce doom upon the said Agnes Kay for the slaughter foresaid conform to the conviction and to cause justice be administered upon her accordingly.

Dumfries, for a warrant to pronounce judgment of death on Agnes Kay, who had murdered her husband. The reason for this special supplication is given.

Complaint by Adam Abircrombie of Auldrayne, as follows:—After many disgraceful indignities and oppressions committed by George Gordon of Newton upon him for which he cited the said George before their Lordships, and the case having been dealt with on the 15th instant, he expected that during the dependance of this action the said George would have forborne all other violent and indirect dealings against him. Yet he finds that as soon as he came to Edinburgh he made search in the Register of Hornings, and having found an old horning executed against the complainer at the instance of Agnes Calder, widow of John Andersoun of Bonytoun, the said George, without her consent, raised letters of caption thereupon, for the sole purpose of disgracing and troubling him. Yesternight after they had been heard before their Lordships, the said George between 9 and 10 o'clock, accompanied by George Dempster, John Schand and Stevin Paxtoun, his servants, John Chalmer, messenger, Patrick Chalmer, his son-in-law, James Duncan in Auldrayne, Hew Gordoun and John Turnour, servitors to Sir Alexander Gordon of Cluny, James Drysdail, George Young and John Baxter, town officers, came to the complainer as he was walking upon the street of Edinburgh, and before he was aware "they all violently rushed upon him, harled him to and fra a lang tyme, drugging and drawing him up and down the streit, disgracefullie buffeted him upon the head and others parts of his bodie and preast to have harled him to the tolbuith. And the compleaner, mervelling upon what occasioun thir people so insolentlie wronged him and having modestly demanded of thame the caus of thair insolent behaviour, they seemed to cleere thameselfes be the captioun foresaid proceeding upon the horning abovementiouned; quhilk horning and all that followed thairupoun the compleaner upoun reall satisfioun made to the partie suspendit in the 1627 yeere of God; and having by meere accidente this suspensioun upon him with the acquittances of the partie, he shew the same to the persouns foresaids" who refused to acknowledge them and continued their abuse. Charge having been given to these persons and the pursuer compearing and also the defenders, the Lords assoilzie them, because the complainer for probation referred to the defenders' oaths of verity, and the said George Gordon denied the raising of the said caption, while the said James Drysdail and George Young declared that bailie of Edinburgh, having been charged in virtue of letters of caption by Chalmers, messenger, to apprehend the pursuer, and being commanded by the said bailie to assist the messenger in the execution of their office, they did arrest the pursuer, but immediately on being shown the suspension, they dismissed him without further trouble.

Complaint by Adam Aber-

George Gordon of Newton and others for threatening the com-plainers with assault.

Complaint by Sir Thomas Hope of Craighall, knight baronet, King's Advocate, and by Adam Abircrombie of Auldrayne, John Leith of Hart-hill and George Leith of Threefield, as follows:—Though the wearing of hagbuts and pistols has been often prohibited by the lawes, yet George Gordoun of Newtoun, after committing many insolences against the complainers, understanding that they were on September last to be at the Kirk of Kemnay attending there the ministers of the presbytery of Garioch, assembled together George and Alexander Dempster, James Gordoun, John Mitchell, Stevin Paxtoun and William Skatertie, his servants, John Gordoun of Rotmes, John Leslie of Sheillisgreene, Patrick Gordoun of Glanderstoun and John Leslie of Flinder, armed with swords and other weapons and the prohibited hagbuts and pistols, and lay in wait for them in the highway to have taken their lives "crying aloud in the hearing of all that come by—Lord, if we had anie sight of them"; and they daily go and ride about thus armed for the slaughter of the complainers. Charge having been given to the said George Gordoun of Newtoun, and he compearing, and the Advocate and Adam Abircrombie also compearing, and probation being referred to the defender's oath of verity, who confessed the carrying of the said firearms, the Lords ordain him to pay a fine of 300 merks before Saturday next to the Treasurer, &c., and also that he and Adam Abircrombie find caution for each other's immunity, Gordoun in £1000, and Abircrombie in 1000 merks, and that they will not in future bear firearms. Follows the act of caution to this effect by Patrick Gordoun, brother to Sir Alexander Gordoun of Cluny, for George Gordoun of Newtoun, which, so far as respects lawburrows, includes the other complainers and their families, this being but a temporary bond till a formal bond is drawn up and lodged for registration in the books of Council before December next.

"The whilk day Johne Achesone, generall of the Cunziehous, gave in some overtures in writt for remedying the prejudice and abuse of the course in forrane dollours. The Lords ordanis ane copie of the Articles to be givin to M^r. Followes the tennour of the overtures:—

Proposals by John Acheson,
generall of the Mint, for reforming the currency.

Information anent the present state of the money within the kingdome of Scotland by John Achesone, Generall of your Majesteis Cunziehous.

It may please your Majestie understand that the onelie abuse and mis-gouvernement of the estate of the money within Scotland wes bred by giving course to forraine moneyes by the peece abone the rait of your Hienes awne money, whilk aucht onelie to have course be the unce weight to be sett down be your Majesteis Counsell according to the weight and fynnesse of the pryce of the unce, the deneir and the grane, whairby the lieges may not be deceaved, whilk aucht to be sett furth in print upon ane table within the Cunziehous as wes done in your Hienes fathers tyme the nynt day of Marche, j^mvj^o and nynetene yeeres, and lykewayes by laike of punishement upon the transporters of your Majesteis awne moneyes and importing of infinite sorts of dollours, whairof the lieges nather knowes weight nor fynnesse nor the worth thairof, to thair great prejudice.

For remeid whairof may it please your Hienes to caus the basest sort of the dollours under the fynnesse of the rex dollour to be converted into small money to have course for exchange onelie within your kingdome of Scotland as the countreis of France, Flanders and Germanie does; as lykewayes in the raigne of the Queene Regent and Queene Marie, your Majesteis grandmother, there wes coyned twelfepennie and saxpennie peeces, quhilks would now correspond to pennie and halfe-penneis sterline, besides manie baser sorts of monie, whairby your Hienes may have some benefite and your lieges weill served; and also to convert the rex dollours in your Majesteis awne coyne in the same weight and fynnesse they ar of for making commerce with the Easterne countreis, for performing whairof lett the fynes of the highters and transporters of your Hienes awne moneyes pay for the coynage. Quhereanent if your Majestie will be pleased to give commissioun to ane or twa of your Hienes Counsell with my concurrence to try the same I sall be readie to give my best advice and furtherance for that effect. And concerning the billioun, lett the same have course with the standart of England conforme to the unioun of your Majesteis moneyes, to have course betuix England and Scotland, and for that effect to lett the Booke of Raites be doubled and to be payed in forraine silver plaitt or money of ellevin deniers fyne at suche pryces as your Hienes Counsell sall appoint. Bot lett never your Majestie thinke that your Hienes can keepe moneyes within Scotland without severe and strait punishement, as I have sett doun particularlie in ane Informatioun to your Majesteis Counsell. For conclusioun, if this project be not found expedient, there is no other way to my knowledge bot onelie to conforme your Hienes awne moneyes to the rait of the gold now current, or ellis to diminishe the same ather in weight or in fynnesse, quhereanent your Hienes would doe weill to heare the advice of the cheefe officars of your Majesteis Mynt in England, and in the meane tyme to prohibite the highting of the forraine moneyes under the pane of treasoun, the rather in regarde they ar already higher nor your Hienes awne coyne.”

Supplication
by John Blair of Pittendreich and others that the diet
against them for the death of John Barns may be deserted.

Supplication by John Blair of Pittendreich, William Blair, his son, William Rid in Pittendreich, Richard Thomesone there, David Turnbull there, Robert Edward there, James Soutar there, John Andersone there, Robert Ireland there, James Carmichael in Reidgothins and William Mayne there, as follows:—They were recently charged at the instance of Margaret, Elspet, Jean and Barbara Barns, as sisters, and the remanent kin and friends of the deceased John Barns, to find caution in the Books of Adjournal for compearing before the Justice and his deputs in the tolbooth of Edinburgh upon 8th December next, to answer for the slaughter of the said John Barns, and for testifying of their innocence thereof they found the said caution. But they plead that if the circumstances of that slaughter be considered it will be found that the petitioners cannot justly be chargeable. The said John Barns in January, 1626, came with a number of accomplices all armed to the dwelling-house of Barbara Scrimgeour, widow of David Moncur of Reget Denis, "under cloud and silence of night betuix ten and ellevin of the clocke when she wes in a sober maner going to her bed, and they entering within her hous in a barbarous and uncivill maner, they putt violent hands on her persoun, she being in a maner naiked, her cloathes being louse and cassin aff, and she having nather hoise nor shoes upon her feit and they hurled her perforce out of her hous kaist her on horsebacke behind the said umquhill John Barns and band her with towells and tedders fast to him so as she could by no meanes win aff the hors; quhairupon the shoute and fray being rissin in the countrie and at last comming to the supplicants eares, they out of ane haitrait and detestatioun of that barbarous fact, raise and followed, and with the hazard and

perrell of thair lyfes releved the poore distrest woman readie to have beene overcome and beene defyled according to the filthie humour and lust of the said John; and he and his complices in maintenance of that foule actionn opposed thameselfes by thair haille strenth and might aganis the saids supplicants and cruellie invadit and persewed thame of thair lyfes and in the rancounter the said umquhill Johne gott a straike upon the head with ane tree be one of his owne companie, as the compleaners ar verie confident, of the quhilk straike he departed this lyfe." Further when the matter was brought before their Lordships at the instance of the said Barbara Scrimgeour, "the rapt and ravishing foresaid wes cleerelie verified and provin aganis Alexander Scrimgeour, James Moncreiff and Williame Blaikie, who wer all present with the said umquhill Johne Barns and assisted and tooke part with him in that violent and unlawful deid." When the party perceived that this action was likely to prejudge their intended pursuit of the petitioners, they about March 1626 raised criminal letters against them for their compearance before the Justice on 22d March, of which when their Lordships heard they took cognisance, and ordered the Justice to desert that diet, and to direct no new letters against the supplicants in that matter as an Act of Adjournal extracted from the Books of Justiciary shown to their Lordships proves. The petitioners therefore crave their Lordships to ordain the Justice, the Justice Clerk and his deputies, to desert the foresaid diet against them; and this the Lords do, and direct the Justice Clerk and his deputies not to issue any more criminall letters in this case against the petitioners.

 James Gordoun of Letterfourie, being sheriff and bailie under the Marquis of Huntlie and Lord Gordoun, his son, Sheriff principal of Inverness, over their lands of Badenoch, during his bailiary "committed manie great abuses and bold and high contempts of justice." For instance, Duncan M^cIldowie V^cKinlay in Dunnachtan moir, denounced for the murder of Ewin M^cEwin Braber there, Thomas M^cConnochie, fugitive from justice for the murder of Ferquhar Moir in Innercromane, and Callum Bayne, Alaster Over and Robert Moir, three common and notorious thieves, reivers, sorners and oppressors, being all in his power, and juries being empannelled upon some of them, yet he let them all, and also a number of other thieves, murderers and oppressors, who likewise were in his hands, go free instead of executing justice upon them as the duty of his office required. Further the said James is an avowed and excommunicated Papist, and, hating the complainer because he was a professor of the true religion and opposed to "his indirect policeis for establishing of poperie within Badzenoch," violently and illegally thrust him out of his possession. Some notice of this having been given to his Majesty, the King has recommended to the Lords the trial and censure of the said James. He being charged to compear, and the pursuer compearing personally and the defender by Robert Gordoun of Belownie, his brother and agent, the Lords find it proven that upon "some paction and compositioun" between him and his prisoner the said James did set Duncan M^cIldowie at liberty, after he was taken "rid hand" for the slaughter of Ewin M^cEwin Braber, and delivered into his custody as bailie foresaid and placed in ward in the Castle of Rivens; also that Thomas M^cConnochie and John Oig, being at the horn for the murder of Farquhar Moir in Innercrombe, the said Thomas is suffered to dwell peaceably in the country and upon the slain man's estate, which he now possesses; further that Callum Bayne, Alaster Over and Robert Moir, three common thieves, who were frequently warded by the said James Gordoun for various crimes, were afterwards set at liberty by him upon a composition and giving caution, after which the said Alaster was again apprehended and again set at liberty, and the said Callum Bayne was sent to the wars, by which means their just trial and punishment were evaded. They find that the said James Gordon has thus greatly abused his office of a judge and magistrate, "and hes not discharged that dewtie quhilk became ane gentleman of his birth and persoun authorized with auctoritie and jurisdiction in the countrie," and they ordain him to enter in ward in the tolbooth of Edinburgh within fifteen days, and there remain until suitable order be taken with him in this matter.

Fol. 122, a. Complaint by George Home of Bassindene and Jean Seatoun, his spouse, as follows:—In terms of the proclamation by their Lordships as to the leading of teinds he directed his said spouse "(being heavilie diseased himselfe)" with some of his servants on October last to go to the lands of Derington in the parish of Gordoun, and lead the teinds thereof, as he has been in the habit of doing for several years past. This his said spouse and servants did, and had stacked the teinds upon the ground of the said lands, when Robert Edzer of Holyrood House, 23rd November 1630. Complaint by George Home of Bassindene against Robert Edgar of Wedderlie and others for assaulting the wife of the complainer while she was engaged in lifting the teinds of the lands of Derrington, to which the complainer affirms he has the legal right.

Wedderlie, accompanied by John and William Edzer, his sons, and Robert Douglas, John Hinde, and John Nisbitt, their servants, and others, armed with swords, staves and other weapons, came and violently meddled with the said teinds and assaulted his wife and servants. "The said Robert Edzer shamfullie tooke the said Jeane be the mouth, cruellie wrang the same about so as the blood gushed furth both at the mouth and nose in great quantitie, and than barbarouslie slang the gentlewoman among his horse feit, raid over her with his hors," and thereafter carried off the said teinds to the barnyard of Wedderlie. Charge having been given to the persons complained upon and the pursuers compearing, but of the defenders only John and William Edzer, and several witnesses having been examined, the Lords assoilzie the defenders from the complaint, as the witnesses failed to prove any part of it against them.

Supplication by Patrick, Lord Lindores, for protection that he may come to Edinburgh on legal business.

Supplication by Patrick, Lord Lindores, as follows:—The Lords of Exchequer have appointed the 3rd of December for dealing with his petition anent the gift purchased from his Majesty of the lordship of Lundores to his hurt and prejudice, and as he cannot come to Edinburgh either to consult his agents or appear before the said Lords on account of some civil hornings under which he lies, he craves their Lordships' protection. This they grant until 18th December next.

Complaint by James Whitehead in Currie against William Bishop in Currie and Elizabeth Ramsay, his spouse, for illegal warding in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh.

Complaint by James Quhytheid in Currie, as follows:—William Bishop in Currie and Elizabeth Ramsay, his spouse, having put him to the horn for not compearing before the Council to answer to their complaint of his "breaking up of ane hous in Currie perteaning to thame," thereupon purchased letters of caption, by virtue of which about six weeks ago they warded him in the tolbooth of Edinburgh, where he has since remained in great misery. The house, he says, in which he possessed himself as alleged, "is his awne proper heritage," of which his prosecutors are only wadsetters for a small sum of money, and by reason "of ane great spait of water whilk come down upon the hous where he dwelt in the moneth of last and wes lykelye to have drowned him and his familie, he wes forced to enter within the hous foresaid whilk wes waist," and he afterwards agreed with his prosecutors to pay them a certain rent for the same from Whitsunday last to Martinmas now past. But they circumvented him and put him to the horn, and now intend to undo him and his ten children for whom he cannot labour, being thus kept in ward. Both pursuer and defenders compearing and being heard, the Lords ordain James Quhytheid to enact himself to remove himself and his wife and family from the said house at Whitsunday next under a penalty of 1000 marks, and also in a like sum for the safety of the said William Bishop and William Bishop, his son; and they ordain the provost and bailies of Edinburgh to set him at liberty. Follows the Act whereby James Quhytheid obliges himself in terms of the above deliverance.

These letters summoned them to answer before the Justice and his deutes in the tolbooth of Edinburgh on 16th July last, but their Lordships were pleased to postpone that diet to 10th December next. The petitioner was resolved to keep this day, "if it had pleased God to have continewed his health; bot now he is so visite with infirmitie and sicknesse that he is not able to travell aniewhere frome his hous." He therefore craves the further continuation of the case till some day in January next. The Lords appoint the 26th of January and direct that new caution be taken from "the criminalls" for their appearance that day; and that the Earl of Galloway give lawful and timely information of this change to the said Laird of Lochinvar and his friends so as to obviate unnecessary travelling on their part in the matter.

Supplication by Alexander Aikenhead, burges of Edinburgh, as follows:—For the past eleven years he has been distressed as cautioner for the deceased Cuthbert Borthuick and by advancing great sums of money to the Lady Borthuick, which she and Lord Borthuick, her husband, have converted to their own use, and regarding which he can obtain no redress, he is utterly wrecked. Lady Borthuick now denies the debt, and she and Mark Ker, her brother, use all means to frustrate his getting payment and so satisfying his creditors, whom he is most willing to satisfy if he could but get his own. For this purpose he has several actions depending before the Lords of Session against the said Lady Borthuick and her brother, and he craves their Lordships' protection that "he may attend the ending of his actions." Advocate, for his Majesty's interest, and Patrick Hannay of Kirkdail, Gilbert M^cSkellie in Flacharrie and James M^cBirnie there, his servants, as follows:—Although the bearing of hagbuts and pistols has been often prohibited, yet when the said Patrick Hannay after obtaining a decreet of the Lords of Session against Patrick M^cClellane in Glenturke and certain others for payment of certain sums of money, caused Patrick Galbraith, messenger, proceed (in terms of letters of pointing and apprising dated 17th September last) to the lands of Glenturke in the sheriffdom of Wigtown, and point nine oxen, which the said messenger took to the market cross of Wigtoun and offered for the sums for which they were appraised, and when no offer was made for them, delivered them to the complainer in part payment of his debt, who thereupon took them home to his lands of Clacharrie and inclosed them in folds, Thomas M^cClellane in Kirkcudbright, brother's son to the Laird of Bombie, and a number of accomplices armed with swords, jacks, and other weapons and the forbidden hagbuts and pistols, came under silence of night to the said folds and violently carried off the said oxen. Moreover, they daily wear the said prohibited weapons and shoot at the complainer's tame doves therewith, striving to stir him up to the doing of something lawless, but which he forbears from his respect to law and justice and trusting that his Majesty's Council will provide for the quiet of the country and not suffer such disorders to pass unpunished. The pursuers compearing, but not the defender, the Lords ordain the said Thomas M^cClellane to be denounced.

Complaint by James Crichtoun of Fendraucht, as follows:—Several Acts were made by the late King James against "the perturbers of the kirk in tyme of divine service, especiallie ane Act made in his Majesteis ellevint Parliament cap. 27, whairby it is statute and ordained that quhatsomever persoun or persons sall happin heerafter to perturbe the order of the kirk in tyme of divine service or make anie tumult, raise anie fray ather in kirk or kirkyaird, whairthrow the people than conveenned sall happin to be disquyetted, troubled or disperst, that everie suche persoun sall be severelie punished in maner specefeit in the said Act." Yet when on 12th December instant, being Sunday, the complainer went to the kirk, called the Little Kirk, in Edinburgh for hearing the sermon, and was sitting quietly and peaceably in the church, "Johne, Bishop of the Yles, comming to the Kirk and perceaving where the compleaner was sitting he makes his addresse directlie towards him and with ane angrie and boasteous countenance when as the compleaner made him way to goe by him he most despitefullie lifted his neiff thinking with his whole force to have strickin the compleaner on the head, but missing his head he dang aff his hatt in the publict view and sight of the hail people conveenned in the Kirk, who with great greefe recented the scandalous profanatioun of thair kirk upon the Lords holie Sabboth and after such ane shamefull maner as hes not benee usuall in Both parties compearing and they and witnesses having been heard, the Lords find "That the said defender being going alongs the loft to his ordinarie place and being straited in his passage where the persewer satt, and apprehending that the persewer had of purpose stopped him in his way, the said defender out of his inconsiderat passioun did cast aff the persewer's hatt." In this he has committed a very great offence and scandal, but the defender being "ane ecclesiastick persoun," they remit the censure and punishment of his fault to the Archbishop of St. Andrewes and others of the High Commission.

Counter complaint by John, Bishop of the Yles, against the Laird of Fendraucht, as follows:—"Upon Sunday last he having according to his usuall maner addrest himselfe to the kirk of Edinburgh for hearing the preaching and going in to his seate where ordinarilie he sitts, and a number of gentlemen of good ranke and qualitie being sitting betuix the entrie and his seate they all suffered him peaceable to goe by thame, and the Laird of Fendraucht amongs others being there, how soone the compleaner come neere to him, he with ane angrie countenance refused him passage by him, closed the passage with his feit so as there wes no possibilitie to goe by him, and by his indiscreit behaviour" did what in him lay to cause disorder in the kirk, which the complainer "patientlie prevented reserving to the saids Lords the censuring of this offence as they sall thinke meit." Both parties compearing, and they and witnesses being heard, the Lords assoilzie the defender, as the complainer failed to prove any part of his complaint.

Supplication by Sir Alexander Hamilton of Bancreiff anent a question relative to the taxation.

Supplication by Sir Alexander Hamilton of Bancreiff, as follows:—Sir Patrick Hepburne of Wauchtoun as principal, and the Laird of Smetoun Hepburne and Sir Robert Hepburne of Alderstoun, as cautioners, are obliged to pay to the petitioner by their bond an annual rent of 1900 merks, "without anie conditioun of ane principal soume (whilk deis with himselfe)." He had consulted his agents as to whether this annual rent, wanting a stock, was liable to the taxation, and was informed that it was not, and therefore he neglected to give it up. He is loath, however, to leave the matter merely upon the opinion of his advocates, which might unnecessarily draw him into danger, and so he craves that their Lordships will declare their judgment in the matter, and if they find it liable to taxation that they will grant their warrant to him to give up the same yet in inventory and pay thereupon. The Lords find that this annualrent is not of the nature of those subject to the taxation, and exoner the petitioner from all payment of taxation therefor in time coming.

Complaint by Sir Thomas Hope of Craighall, King's Advocate, and George Gordon of Newtown, and George Dempster, his servitor, as follows:—Notwithstanding the laws prohibiting wearing of hagbuts and pistols, convocation of the lieges in arms and challenges to the single combat, John Leith of Harthill, "ane commoun tuilyear and turbulent persoun," who has been often punished for his insolencies by the Council, and put under caution in £5000 to keep the peace, yet continues in his lawless courses. On , "being Witsonday and the Lords Sabboth," when Leith knew that the said John Gordoun was at home in his house of Newtown, "he associat unto himselfe George Leith of Threifeild, and Adame Abircrombie of Aldrayne who horsed thamselffes with great lances in thair hands and assembled togidder the nomber of threescore persouns or thereby all boddin in feare of warre with swords, Jedburgh stalffes," and other weapons, including hagbuts and pistols, "with whome they come galloping in ane tumultuous and furious maner to the compleaners said place of Newtown and without respect to the Lord's day brasched up the yetts of his said hous and cried to the compleaner, 'Come out, feeble pultroun, and breake a speir,' otherwayes they threatned to his forder shame to runne at the glove on his greene; and with that the said Johne Leith lighted aff his hors and sett up a glove whereat he being about to rin, the said George Dempster come furth and declared to thame, as the truthe wes, that his maister wes not at home; quhairupoun he fiercelie persewed the said George of his lyfe, ranne him throw the breaches with ane speir, strake him with the butt thairof diverse great straikes on the head, wounded him on diverse parts of his bodie and namelie on the right hand to the effusioun of his blood, and thereafter the said Johne Leith verie barbarouslie and inhumanelie overraid the said George Gordouns nurse with ane barne of three or four yeere old in her hand, quhairby the young barne wes so affrighted that for the space of twa moneths thereafter he wes distracted in his witts. And not content heirwith the saids Johne and George Leiths and Adame Abircrombie raid in a furious maner with drawn swords in thair hands throw the compleaners growing cornes crying, 'Feeble pultroun, come out if thou darre,' with diverse others disgracefull speeches." punishment obtained the mediation of several gentlemen, who persuaded the complainers to pass from the charge, as the persons accused had promised to behave more peacefully in future. Though the complainer willingly complied, yet as soon as he came home, on 3d September last the said John and George Leith sent Captain John Forbes, otherwise called Captain Tulloch, to his house, who got him to come forth to his parkes and there told him he had come with commission from George Leith of Threefeild "to offer him the combat," and to appoint time and place of meeting. On the complainer declining he delivered the like commission from the said John Leith, and this being also refused, they daily lie in wait for him to take his life. Parties being cited, and pursuers compearing, also Adam Abircrombie and George Leith, defenders, John Leith being represented by the said Adam, who produced a certificate from Dr. William Johnestoun that the said John was "heavilie visite with sicknesse," and Captain Forbes not compearing, witnesses were heard and also the parties, whereupon the Lords find that the said George Leith challenged the said George Gordoun to the combat, and has carried a pistol since harvest last, and commit him to ward in the tolbooth of Edinburgh until he pay a fine of £40 to the Treasurer, etc. They assoilzie Adam Abircrombie; ordain Captain Forbes to be put to the horn; and direct George Leith and Adam Abircrombie to restore to George Dempster his hagbut, pistol, and whinger.

Complaint by John M^cCrystene of Monkhill and William M^cCrystene, his brother, against Patrick Hannay and others for assault and repeated attempts on their lives.

Complaint by Sir Thomas Hope of Craighall, King's Advocate, and Johne M^cCrystene of Monkhill and William M^cCrystene, his brother, as follows:—Notwithstanding the prohibition to bear hagbuts and pistols Patrick Hannay, son to Patrick Hannay of Kirkdaill, William Hannay, his brother, Patrick Hannay, son to William Hannay of Kilfillane, Harry and Michael Walker, Johne M^cFadzeane and James M^cBirnie, servitors to the said Patrick, all armed with swords, staves and other weapons and the forbidden hagbuts and pistols, on 23d May last, fiercely assailed the said Johne M^cCrystene, and pursued him for his life, the said Patrick Hannay, younger, presenting a "bendit pistolet" at him, which providentially misgave; also on 3rd June thereafter these persons came armed as above to the complainer's lands of Breidfill, and the said William Hannay shot a pistol at him, which he escaped, and then drew another pistol and presented it at him, which happily misgave. Next day Patrick Hannay, elder of Kirkdaill, accompanied with these persons armed as above, came to the said lands of Breidfill and carried away the complainer's sheep and nolt to the town of Wigtoun and threatened the poor men whom they found in the fields keeping his said goods that if ever they found them there again they would "cutt the lugges out of thair heid," so that none dare pasture any goods there. Afterwards the said persons met the said William M^cCrystene, feld him to the ground with batons and other weapons, and cut his head in three places to the effusion of his blood. Again on 6th June following, "being Sunday," all these persons armed with guns came to the kirk of Wigtoun purposely to take the complainer's life; and more recently on the said month of June the said Patrick Hannay and his said associates, learning that the said John M^cCrystene was to be at Wigtoun about some necessary business, met in the house of armed with guns and pistols of purpose to shoot the complainer, if happily he had not escaped. Charge having been given to these persons, the pursuers compeared personally, and of the defenders the said Patrick Hannay who produced (1) a "testimonial" under the hand of the provost of Wigtoun, the Commissary of Wigtoun, the Laird of Barnbarroch, John Fraser, bailie, and Thomas M^cKie, clerk of Wigtoun, to the effect that the said William Ahannay and Harie Walker had left the country in the beginning of September last and were presently in Ireland; and (2) the general remission granted by the King with consent of the Estates to his subjects for the breach of some penal statutes in which the said Patrick alleged the bearing of hagsbutts and pistols was included. Witnesses were also produced by the complainers to prove the special points of oppression in the libel, but in respect that these failed in their proof, and of the foresaid remission the Lords assoilzie the defenders, and excuse the absence of the said William Ahannay and Harry Walker on account of their absence from the kingdom.

Complaint by Katharine Hamiltoun, spouse to James Baillie of Parke, as follows:—On 18th February last she obtained decret before their Lordships ordaining her said husband to infest her in a legal way in the half of his living of Parke, Auchintibber and Corsbasket, with the burden of the entertainment of their three daughters and payment of the annual-rent of 1000 merks. He has not obeyed the decret and has been put to the horn accordingly and contemptuously remains thereat, and she has been obliged to take legal proceedings before the Lords of Session against the tenants of these lands for the payment of her half for the year 1629. Owing, however, to collusion between her said husband and his tenants and private pactions between him and other parties, she is unable to derive any benefit from their Lordships decret unless a certain portion of her husband's estate be definitely apportioned for her support.

Katharine
Hamilton
against James Baillie of Park,
her husband,
who prevents her from uplifting the half of his annual rents which had been decreed to her by Act of Council.

Charge having been given to the said James Baillie and his tenants, but who compeared not, the pursuer, personally present, produced a rental of her husband's lands, showing the names of the tenants and the amount payable by each, and that the rental, including the teind duty paid therefrom, amounted to one hundred and forty-five bolls of meal, forty-one bolls of beir, £48 money, and three dozen and six fowls. This present diet had been appointed for proving the rental, which was done by the production of tenants and their depositions and confessions. The defender being still absent, the Lords find that the rental of his lands is as is stated above, and that the half thereof extending to 74 bolls meal, 19 bolls bear, £24 of money and 33 fowls is due to the pursuer in terms of the foresaid decret, and they dispone and assign to her

the particular portions of her husband's lands following, the tenants of which they ordain to make payment to her of their mails and duties for the lands occupied by them respectively, viz. :—John Wod, 20 bolls meal, 6 bolls beir and 6 fowls; Jean Hendersoun, 10 bolls meal, 3 bolls beir and 6 fowls; James Littlejohn, 6 bolls meal, 2 bolls beir and 4 fowls; John Porter, 3 bolls meal, 1 boll beir, £16 money and 3 fowls; John Bowman, 20 bolls meal, 4 bolls beir and 8 fowls; James Dick, 2 bolls meal and 2 fowls; John Thomesoun, 13 bolls meal, 3 bolls beir and 4 fowls; John Arbuckill £4 money; and John Wilkie for the Walkmill possessed by him, £4, as part of the duty paid by him. The Lords further authorise the pursuer in case of the refusal of any of these tenants to pay, to eject and remove them, just as if the same were done in her husband's name; declaring that her discharges to them shall be sufficient and shall keep them safe at the hands of the said James Baillie. Moreover, if the said James Baillie shall molest her in the uplifting of these rents she shall have redress against the other half of his lands. And seeing that the said James Baillie has a tack of the teinds of the whole lands granted to him by William, Lord Blantyre, and Mr. David Schairp, parson of Kilbryde, for payment of 20 bolls meal and 6 bolls beir to the said Lord Blantyre, and 5 bolls 2 firlots meal and 2 firlots beir to the said Mr. David Schairp, and that it is just and reasonable that the pursuer should pay the half thereof, they ordain that upon such payment she shall have good right to collect the teinds also of the half of the lands assigned to her without let or hindrance. the Lords modify to her for the year 1630, without prejudice to her right to sue for what is due to her since the date of the decret fore-said.

Supplication by Alexander Leslie of Aukhorsk, Alexander Leslie of Elrig, Patrick Leslie of Legatsdene, and Richard Mouat, servitor to the Laird of Pitcapple, as follows:—The Laird of Fendraucht has charged them to find caution for compearing before the Justice on 12th January next for the burning of the place of Fendraucht. In the case of a number of their friends who have been cited for the same cause for the 10th instant, the Lords have been pleased to grant warrant for continuing their summonses to the 21st January, and as it is all one matter, and that those cited for one diet must likewise await the other, they crave that warrant may be given to the Justice, and the Justice Clerk and their deputes, to continue all to the said 21st January. This the Lords grant provided the supplicants find new caution for their appearance that day.

Supplication by John, Earl of Cassillis, as follows:—Sir Patrick Agnew of Lochnaw, sheriff principal of Galloway, purchased a commission for the apprehension and trial of John M^cWilliame in Glenluce, who was accused of theft, and whose examination was to be reported to their Lordships. The said John M^cWilliame, taking guilt to himself, fled, and, as the said sheriff alleges, he associated with himself Thomas and Alexander M^cCaw, indwellers in Wigtoun, and together they stole a great many sheep out of both Galloway and Carrick. At last the said John was taken by the said sheriff, and he has procured a commission for putting him to an assise and for the apprehension of the said Thomas and Alexander M^cCaw. But their Lordships have been circumvented by the said sheriff in this matter in respect of these M^cCaws, as they are not indwellers in Wigtoun but the petitioner's tenants of his lands of Aushein, and having recently fallen out with the said sheriff's tenants of Carngarren in which “some ruffles” have taken place between them, the said sheriff has sought this commission to be avenged upon them under colour of law. Being at open hostility with the petitioner and his said tenants, the said sheriff cannot but be a “verie suspect” judge to them. He therefore craves the discharge of the foresaid commission and the appointment of some “unsuspect” persons to apprehend and try them. The Lords discharge the Sheriff of Galloway's commission against the said Thomas and Alexander M^cCaw and appoint Sir William Cunninghame of Caprintoun, James Chalmers of Gatgirth, and the

He is most anxious to complete the business so that the said sum may be assigned for satisfaction of his creditors, and he therefore craves an extension of his protection both to himself, and to William Wallace of Ellerslie, William Wallace of Preistikschar, Robert Wallace of Barnweill, Robert Wallace of Brighous and John Tait of Adamehill, who are engaged as cautioners for him to David Cuninghame, servitor to his Majesty, for 4500 merks; the said William Wallace of Ellerslie, Mr. John Hamiltoun, minister at Cragie, Andrew Crawford of Drings, Mr. John Chalmers of Poquharne and Paul Glover of Trinitieland who are engaged as cautioners for him to Nicol Edzer, merchant burges of Edinburgh, for 2000 merks, and to William Cuninghame of Drongins for 500 merks; and the said William Wallace of Ellerslie, Robert Wallace of Barnweill, John Wallace of Sheillis, James Wallace of Dulleres and Andrew Crawford of Drings, who are engaged as cautioners for him to Robert Smith and William Gray, merchants in Edinburgh, for about 500 merks. Justice Clerk and their deutes from proceeding with this accusation against them, and the Lords, having seen the contract, warrant and rolment of court referred to, accede to the prayer of the petitioners.

Supplication by Mr. Joseph Lawrie, minister at Stirlie, as follows:—He was summoned to appear before the Lords of his Majesty's High Commission on 15th December last, but was unable to attend on account of "the heavie sickenesse and visitatioun of his familie." This he duly intimated to the Archbishop of St. Andrews, yet the said Lords proceeded against him in his absence and discharged his provision, and he is now ordained to ward himself within the city of Glasgow within three days after the 15th instant on pain of horning. He therefore craves that their Lordships will continue his entry into the said ward until the end of this winter season, especially as he has urgent legal affairs to attend to here, and he promises to remain in Edinburgh and not to depart thence without their Lordships' permission. The Lords postpone his entry to ward within the city of Glasgow till 31st January instant and meanwhile recommend to the Archbishop of St. Andrews "the satisfioun of the said supplicant his defence conteanit in this supplicatioun according as he sall finde the same to be expedient."

These gentlemen, however, are reluctant to execute this commission until they consult with their lordships as to the punishment to be given "seing they thinke it ane hard mater to take three mens lyffes for sevin sheepe." He therefore craves their Lordships' decision in the matter so that execution of this commission may proceed. Complaint by the Lord High Treasurer
against James Kerr and Alexander Torrie for exporting victual into England.

Complaint by William, Earl of Mortoun, Lord High Treasurer of Scotland, John, Lord Stewart of Tracquir, deputy treasurer, and Sir Thomas Hope of Craighall, knight baronet, his Majesty's Advocate, as follows:—Their Lordships, considering the great scarcity of victual within the kingdom this year, and the probability of a consequent dearth, made a strict prohibition of all exportation thereof by sea or land and especially “at the marches of this kingdome opposite to the marches of England,” under the penalty of the confiscation, not only of the victual, but also of the whole moveables of the transgressor; and this was duly proclaimed at Duncce, Kelso, Selkirk, Jedburgh, and other towns “within the lait borders of this kingdome.” Notwithstanding whereof Andrew Ker of Roxburgh on last sent Baillie of Haltounburne to the barn of Thomas Burne of Ellisheuches, where he received ten bolls of beir and transported them to England. Further, about the same time, James Ker, second son of the said Laird of Lintoun, took out of the said barn fifteen bolls of beir and transported them to England. Also on Alexander Torrie of Mordingtoun took out of the Nunlands three bolls of victual, and transported the same to England. Charge having been given to the said James Ker and Alexander Torrie, and both pursuers and defenders compearing, the Lords remit to the Lord Tracquir, Treasurer Depute, to take order with the defenders according to the merit of the case.

Complaint by Katharine
Hamiltoun
against James Baillie, her husband, for not removing Jean Henderson from his estate as he had been ordered by the

Complaint by Katharine Hamiltoun, spouse of James Baillie of Parke, as follows:—On 18th February, 1630, her said husband, compearing before their Lordships, was placed under caution “to putt Jeane Hendersoun, his tennent, with whome he hes beene suspected to have used over familiar companie, aff his ground, after the separatioun of the last crop frome the ground” under a penalty of 3000 merks, which penalty, if incurred, was to fall to the complainer. Now the said James Baillie has not fulfilled the said act of caution, for Jean Hendersoun still dwells on his land, and so he ought to be decerned to pay the said amount to the complainer. Parties being called, and the complainer appearing by her brother, James Hamiltoun of Barncluthe, and the defender not compearing, the Lords find that the said James Baillie has violated his act of caution, as witnesses examined proved that the said Jean Hendersoun has dwelt upon the lands of Parke this long time past, and was still dwelling there within the last eight days, and ordain letters to be issued against him for payment of the said penalty to the complainer.

Supplication by James Crichtoun of Fendraucht, as follows:—The day appointed for the trial of the persons suspected of the burning of his place of Fendraucht is at hand, but all the persons whose depositions are required for the clearing of the matter have not yet been examined, and especially James Grant, whose information is believed to be of the highest consequence, and who cannot possibly be brought here in time. He therefore craves that the dyet be postponed. The Lords accordingly ordain the Justice, Justice Clerk, and their deputes to continue the said trial until the 15th June next, and to take new caution for the compearance of the criminals.

The Supplication by James Crichton of Fendraucht that the examination of witnesses anent the burning of Fendraucht may be postponed.

Supplication by Matthew Crichtoun, bailie depute of the barony of Glencarne, as follows:—In a bailie court of the said barony which he held on 31st December last, Thomas Patersone, son of the deceased Thomas Patersone of Littlemerk, was accused of stealing from Christian McConneill, his mother, at various times during December, the sum of £19, and upon his own confession was convicted not only of this theft, but of stealing half a cheese from William Wilson's house in Caldside, as the rolment of court bears. He is but a young boy, and the crime of no great moment; therefore the supplicant craves their Lordships' advice as to what sentence he should pass upon him. They ordain him to sentence the said Thomas Patersone to be imprisoned and fed upon bread and water for a month.

Supplication by Matthew Crichton, bailie-depute of the barony of Glencairn, anent the punishment of a boy who has stolen from his mother.

The Lords continue the protection formerly granted to Patrick, Lord Lundores, for his safe attendance upon the Exchequer in reference to the passing of an infetment of the Lordship of Lundores until the last day of February next, because the matter was not yet settled.

Continuance of protection to Patrick, Lord Lindores.

This charge being disregarded, on the 24th of that month the said complainers and some others assisting them went to the said Robert's malt kiln, and in virtue of the foresaid decret pointed certain malt there and carried it to the cross of Rutherglen. Having apprysed it, they carried it back again to the kiln and filled a sack belonging to the complainer with as much of the malt as would satisfy the foresaid debt. But, as soon as the said Robert learned what they were doing, he hounded out against them Janet Wat, his wife, James Dykes, his son, Margaret Louke, and Alexander Mayne and Helen Towres, his wife, who came to the kiln, "patt violent hands in the complainers, cruellie dammeist thame on the head with thair neiffes and with great schuiles strake thame to the ground, gave thame manie bloodie wounds thairwith on the armes, hands and other parts of thair bodie to the effusioun of thair blood and perrell of thair lyffes, and maisterfullie reft frome thame the poynded malt foresaid, and so deforced the messinger in executioun of his office." Supplication by Thomas Lindsay, merchant burges of Edinburgh, as follows:—Robert Fairlie, his apprentice, to whom he had committed the care of his "merchant booth," abusing the trust and confidence reposed in him, has upon all occasions, specially when the petitioner "wes at the kirk" and out of the town on necessary business, disposed of his goods at his pleasure and to his own behoove, selling them when he expected ready money at very small rates, and in other cases upon bonds which he took in his own name without any mention of the petitioner. Discovering the great "decay and inlaid of the commoditeis and goods in his booth," the petitioner investigated the matter and found his loss and damage to amount to £4000; while the said Robert, conscience-stricken and fearing the result of the discovery, has fled, and is looking for some ship to convey him out of the country. This will frustrate the petitioner of all redress, and he therefore craves that their lordships will grant him a commission and warrant empowering all his Majesty's ministers of justice to apprehend the said Robert wherever he may be found on land or ship, and imprison him until he be brought before their Lordships for trial. This the Lords grant with this declaration, that if the supplicant fails to substantiate his allegations he shall be censured by their Lordships, and make good to the party all expense and damage he shall have sustained thereby.

is ane twa part of the halfe, sould rule and square the other twa estaits Acts January 1631-May 1632. Fol. 38, b. of benefices and burrowes, quhairupoun he inferres that seing the barons payes more nor thair twa part that thairfoir the benefices and burrowes sould pay proportionallie more nor thair part, quhilk is ane meere fallacie and contrarie to the Acts of Parliament and Conventioun quhilks ar the warrand of the taxatioun, whairby the taxt of everie estate is determined be the awne severall and distinct portioun without respect to anie proportioun of halfe, thrid part or twa part of the other halfe, sua that the taxt rollis of everie estait must be directed according to the owne severall grants and cannot be exceedit. And where M^r Haig urges the divisioun of the taxatioun amongs the three estaits according to the proportioun of one halfe for the benefices, and the twa part of the other halfe for the barons, and the thrid part of that same halfe for the burrowes, it is trew that this proportioun wes observed in preceeding taxatiouns where ane totall and definite soume wes grantit; and yitt when the barouns wer taxt to ane twa part of the halfe there wes ane speciall warrand of Parliament for uplifting of ane certane soume of ilke pund land in satisfacioun of thair twa part, quhilk soume of ilke pund land Fol. 39, a. being calculat togidder exceedit thair twa part be a thrid, quhilk made these who had the care of the effaires of estait for the tyme in succceeding taxatiouns to absteane frome ane certane soume divisible be the foresaids proportiouns least the barons who payed more nor thair twa part of the halfe sould crave the superplus to be rebated to thame. And now that whilk in so great prudence wes caried for the good of your Majesteis service is drawin in debate be this new motioun whiche can never benefite your Majestie bot may unhappilie give occasioun to the barons to compleane of disproportion and so diminishe your Majesteis taxatiouns. The other ground quhairupoun M^r Haig founds his motioun is, that als muche wes exacted of benefices and burrowes under the name of taxt as would equall the excesse of the barons pund lands, and thairfoir still he urges that the rollis may be ruled according to that proportioun. Quhairin we find this grosse error that he distinguishes not that whilk wes exacted by warrand of the Act of taxatioun frome that whilk wes exacted unjustlie and without warrand. And albeit the superplus quhilk wes exacted under the name of taxatioun without warrand may be callit to ane accompt, yitt we cannot thinke that the bypast exactioun made unjustlie and without ane warrand can be ane ground whairupoun to augment and increase the taxt of that estait heereafter. All whiche we having remonstrated to the said M^r Haig and having laboured with reasoun to convince his error yitt we find him so pertinaciouslie weddit to his awne opinioun that he will not suffer the doubts to be cleered; and thairfoir we doe humbelie acquaint your Majestie with the trew estait of the business and with the ground of M^r Haigs mistaking and our awne judgements thairin; in respect whair of we thinke the mending of the rollis to be nather lawfull nor feseable. And yitt in the meane

Supplication by John Traill of Blebo as follows:—He is so very hardly pressed by his creditors that he is unable to take any steps for their satisfaction, though, as is well known, he has land and rent more than enough to pay all his indebtedness. He had placed the matter in the hands of some of his friends, but they had proved “verie undewtiful and negligent thairin,” having secured themselves and neglected the rest of his creditors. Accordingly he must take the matter into his own hands, and he is resolved to sell the best of his lands in order to satisfy his creditors, but he cannot do so unless their Lordships grant him their warrant to come to Edinburgh and remain there for some time for this purpose; which he craves. Pateron then went to Patrick Crawford of Auchnames and Dame Margaret Houstoun, his mother, and told them what had taken place, and they, knowing the said messenger was to execute a new pointing on the morrow, hounded out the said James Patersoun, William and John Patersoun, his brothers, and Bessie and Elspet Patersoun, his sisters, to lie in wait for the complainer in the highway, armed with swords, staves, and other weapons; and they as soon as they perceived the complainer “fiercelie sett upon him, compelled his twa sones and the messinger to flee for feare of thair lyffes, and without respect to the compleaner, thair pastour, shamefullie and disgracefullie strake him upon the backe with thair swords, stalffes and battouns be the whole space of ane quarter of ane myle untill at last he wes forced to flee in to ane hous, where they had not failed to have killed him, if ane honest man perceaving thair cruell purpose had not brought him ane horse and so convoyed him out of thair hands.” Charge having been given to the persons above complained upon and to Margaret King, and the pursuer compearing, who declared that he passed from that part of his complaint against the said Dame Margaret Howstoun, Lady Auchnames, and the said Patrick Crawford also compearing, but none of the other defenders, the Lords decern as follows:—Probation in the matter of hounding out being referred to the oath of the said Patrick Crawford, he denied the charge, and is assoilzied. The Lords accordingly give warrant to the clerks and all others whom this matter concerns to receive the inventories of the inhabitants of the said lordship of Bothwell, and also of that part of his Majesty's taxation granted in July last, notwithstanding the expiry of the appointed term, provided they be given up before 30th April next.

Supplication by James, Earl of Abercorn, as follows:—He had in a former petition to their Lordships represented the necessity of the Countess of Abercorn, his mother, coming to Edinburgh, for settling with the advice of their legal advisers the state of his own house, of which she has had the charge since the death of his father, and the provisions of his brother and sisters, when their Lordships granted their warrant for that effect until 2nd February. Though they have been as busy and anxious as possible to bring matters to a conclusion, they have not succeeded, yet some reasonable progress has been made. Without his mother's presence, however, nothing can be effected, and he therefore craves an extension of the protection. This the Lords grant till first April next.

Supplication by Sir John Vaus of Barnbarroch, and Patrick Vaus, his son and heir apparent, as follows:—They are charged at the instance of Ninian Fleeming of Craichdow to answer to his complaint of their illegally taking and imprisoning him. They were resolved to obey the charge, but the weather has been so unseasonable that Sir John, on account of his great age, could not possibly travel, and the said Patrick has come with great difficulty and at the hazard of his life to answer.
But the fear of some civil hornings which he and his father underlie disables them, and they therefore crave a short postponement of the case and their Lordships' protection. The Lords continue the case until 17th February and grant the protection craved until the 18th.

Complaint by Andrew Ker, burgess of Selkirk, and Mr. John Ker, town clerk there, as follows:—Mr. Patrick Schaw, minister at Selkirk, possessed with a groundless and "inveterat haitrent and malice" against them, abuses the authority of his place for the execution of this private grudge. By his discourses in the pulpit and his politic suggestions otherwise he has influenced the Council and community of that town to believe that he, the said Mr. John, has betrayed the common estate of the said burgh and sold the liberties thereof to Sir John Murrey of Philiphauche, knight, and James Murrey, his son, by a sasine given to them of the petty customs of the said burgh, and so he has rendered the said Mr. John hateful to the people. Further, on 10th December last the said Mr. Patrick came to the tolbooth of Selkirk where the bailies and the said Mr. John were sitting together dealing with the inventories of the extraordinary taxatioun, and haying privately caused convene the council, without any lawfull citation of or complaint of party against the said Mr. John, he publicly accused him of treason against the town, falsehood in giving of the said sasine and perjury in breaking his oath of fidelity to the said town. The said Mr. John replied that the said sasine was lawfully given by Andrew Ker, sheriff depute of Selkirk, in obedience to a precept from Chancery proceeding upon a resignation made by the said Sir John Murrey, and that he could not refuse to be notary thereto seeing he was sheriff clerk for the time, yet the sasine was in no way prejudicial to the town, and there was nothing more in the said James's sasine given in December 1625, than was in that of his father, Sir John, given in 1606. This answer satisfied the council, who found that they could not be competent judges in such a matter and discreetly forbore to meddle further therewith. Finding himself disappointed the said Mr. Patrick, with the assistance of a faction whom he had seduced, caused convene the whole burgesses and inhabitants of the town by tuck of drum and sent for the said Mr. John and Andrew Ker. They appeared, and Mr. John again took exception to this disorderly challenge, but answered as formerly, whereupon the said Mr. Patrick rose and in the heat of his passion "threatned the said M^r Johne with his stalffe, callit him ane traitour and ane false knave, [and] commandit him to remove." Alexander Barclay and John Cochrane, messenger, committed to ward for abusing the office of messenger.

Complaint by Sir Thomas Hope of Craighall, King's Advocate, and John Campbell in Barnefurde, his informer, as follows:—Notwithstanding of the Acts of Parliament for the restraining of messengers and officers of arms from abusing their office, yet Alexander Barclay in Maybole, having raised letters against John and Gilbert Kennedy for mutilation of him, and having delivered the same to John Cochrane, messenger, for the summoning of an assise, in collusion with him summoned a number of persons not contained in the roll of assise, and agreed with them for their remaining at home on payment of composition, viz., John Campbell of Barefurde, John Boill in Cassillis, John Boill in Crawfordstoun, Quintene Boill in Kirkmichaell and John Fultoun in Kirkgannoch, every one of whom gave half a boll of oats and 12s. of silver; Charles Campbell in Cassintoun who gave four pecks of oats; James Mure in Thomastoun, who gave two dozen of “keilling” and a goose; John M^cIndert, who gave half a boll of oats; and John Bodde in Carsto, who gave three pecks of groats. This form of “scafferie” and oppression ought to be severely punished. Pursuers and defenders compearing and they and certain witnesses having been heard and examined, the Lords find the complaint proven against the defenders quantum ad victoriam causæ, whereby they have committed “ane verie great scafferie and oppressioun upon his Majesteis subjects,” and they ordain them to be warded in the tolbooth of Edinburgh until their Lordships shall liberate them, and to pay eight merks to each of the witnesses.

He has been careful to see these terms fulfilled, and so Captain Daw has been released, and payment made to him of 5000 francs, which was the appraised value of his ship as seized by the owners of the Calais ship taken by him, and which sum was consigned by them in the hands of one Fonquet in Burdeaulx, as the contract made thereupon contains an express prohibition to all officers of arms from meddling with anything concerning the said patent, or funerals, interments, and the liberties, profits and commodities due to the said office; and he had caused the said patent to be proclaimed at the market cross of Edinburgh with sound of trumpet and all other solemnities requisite. Nevertheless Thomas Dryisdail, "Ila Herald," not content with what is due to his own place, usurps the place of the said Lyon King by giving arms at his pleasure and often to base and unworthy persons "not capable of that order." He has corrupted the arms and badges of sundry of the nobility without the allowance or knowledge either of them or of the complainer, and in everything proper and due to the complainer, he "does and undoes at his pleasure, disdainng and contemning to acquaint the compleaner thairwith or to crave his advice and opinioun thairin, and in effect studeis to make the compleaner ane cipher, leaving to him the bare name, and he himselfe to have full and sole administratioun of the compleaners place and office, and with that he does forder what in him lyes to stirre up the rest of the heralds in a mutinous factioun aganis the compleaner." The pursuer compearing and also the defender, the Lyon King passed from that part of the complaint relating to funerals and interments, and parties having been heard, the Lords ordain the defender "to forbear the giving out of anie new armes to whatsomever persoun or persons without the advice and approbatioun of the said Lyoun, and that he give not out anie extracts of armes till first his bookes of armes be seene and allowed be the said Lyoun; quhilks bookes the said Lords ordains the said Lyoun to delyver to the said defender betuix and the first day of Majj nixt."

the Council.

Complaint by James Neilsoun of Madinpape, burgess of Dumfries, as follows;—John Maxwell of Logane, steward-depute of Kirkcudbright, having cited the complainer to his court on certain charges of theft, he complained to their Lordships thereupon and obtained summons of advocation against the said steward-depute. The case came before their Lordships on 10th August last, when they, perceiving how that the steward-depute, under collour of law was but seeking private revenge and the forfeiture of the complainer's estate, discharged him from proceeding against the complainer and appointed the trial of the complainer to be before the Justice in the tolbooth of Edinburgh. To frustrate their Lordships' decree the said steward-depute cited him to appear before the Commissioners of the Middle Shires in their justice court at Dumfries on 8th February last to answer to such charges of theft as should be laid to his charge, or practically super inquirendis, there being no specific crimes laid to his charge. Charge having been given for the compearance of Robert, Earl of Nithisdail, and Sir John Charters of Amisfeild, commissioners foresaid, Mr. Cuthbert Cunninghame and John Mortoun, clerks, John Richardsoun, their procurator-fiscal, and the said John Maxwell of Logane as their informer, and the pursuer compearing by William Neilsone, his procurator, and John Maxwell being also present, but none of the other defenders, and parties being heard, the Lords remit the trial of the pursuer to William, Viscount of Drumlanrig,

Lord Dalzell, Sir Robert Greir of Lag, and Robert Crichtoun of Rychill, or any two of them, of whom the Viscount of Drumlanrig shall be one, authorising them to hold courts and try the pursuer on such specific charges as shall be contained in the indictment to be laid against him, and minister justice in the matter conform to law.

Complaint by Thomas Gowdie, merchant burges of Dumfries, as follows:—The Commissioners of the Middle Shires proclaimed the holding of a justice court at Dumfries on 8th February last, and upon the information of Katherine Edzer, widow, Agnes Maxwell, mother, and the remanent kin and friends of the deceased Harbert M^cKie, younger, burges of Dumfries, they cited the complainer to underlie the law for the slaughter of the said Harbert M^cKie. Now, in thus acting they have proceeded illegally, because he was already tried on this charge before the Justice and his deutes in the tolbooth of Edinburgh in June, 1623, when it was proved that the said Harbert received no hurt from the complainer, and that “his death proceedit frome the straike of ane hors,” and the Justice continued the process until a new citation should be given upon fifteen days’ warning. He cannot therefore be brought before new judges, but the final decision must be given by the Justice before whom the case was begun. Besides, the saids commissioners were not clad with their commission at the time of the alleged slaughter in December 1622, and therefore cannot be judges in a matter which did not occur within the term of their commission. Further, the said commissioners cannot be judges to the complainer because the said Agnes, the mother of the said Herbert, who is chief pursuer of the complainer, is “descendit frome the specialls of the name of Maxwell, and being assisted and backed be the Laird of Conhaith, who wes one of the compleaners persewers before his Majesteis Justice Generall, thair power, credite and freindship is so great in these bounds and thair malice so extreme and violent aganis the compleaner as he darre not repaire to anie justice court or commissioner court within the Middle shires; it being weill knowne in the countrie that this persute is not so muche moved aganis the compleaner for anie zeale of justice as of malice.” He is most innocent of the crime charged against him, and is “ane ignorant man, not acquainted with the lawes, and greatlie invyed becaus it hes pleased God to blesse his vertewes and industreis with some little portioun of meanes.” He therefore pleads that his trial should be advocated from the Commissioners to the Justice Generall and his deutes. The saids Commissioners, being cited and compearing by Robert Maxwell of Logane, and the pursuer also compearing, and parties having been heard, the Lords discharge the said Commissioners of all proceeding in this case, and leave the same with the Justice and his deutes before whom it was first commenced.

Complaint by Thomas Gowdie, merchant burges of Dumfries, against Katherine Edzer and others, who seek to bring him before a Court where he will not receive justice in the case of the crime with which he is charged.

They refused, and upon the said Patrick offering to him his rent as being all he could lawfully crave Cranstoun "brake ane great battoun upon his head and arme in foure peeces." Pursuers and defender compearing and being heard, and probation being referred to the defender's oath of verity, he confessed that "he strake the said persewer with ane sticke upon the shoulder and brake the same upon him, bot denyed that he strake him on the head." For this the Lords ordain him to pay ten merks to the pursuer and 40s. to each of the witnesses. And because he said to the pursuer in the outer Council house, "If I thought thow sould have compleanned upon so small a fault, I sould have brokin thy heid worse," the Lords ordain him to be warded in the tolbooth of Edinburgh and to remain therein upon his own charges until he pay a fine of £40 to his Majesty's Treasurer.

tanning.

Complaint by John, Lord Areskine, as follows:—At great expense he has brought into this kingdom a number of strangers "skilled and expert men in the tanning of ledder" to instruct the tanners and barkers how rightly "they sall reforme thair potts and dresse and handle thair ledder the tyme that the same lyes in thair potts." Many of the tanners have embraced this reformation in terms of the Acts of Council and public proclamations thereupon, and both their private interest and the public welfare have thereby benefited, yet "the most rude and ignorant in that trade, as namelie, Williame Garioch in Skalloway Bankes, Jehoram Jamesoun, James Broun and Thomes Marjoribankes there" oppose the same, refuse all instruction, and their hides not being allowed to remain in the pots for a sufficient time, are brought to market raw. He pleads that they may be punished for their contempt and compelled to obey the law. The pursuer compearing by Lewes Somervell, his servant, but the defenders not compearing, the Lords ordain that they be put to the horn and escheat.

Supplication by John Monro, son of the deceased Mr. John Monro, minister at Tarbet, as follows:—During his minority when he was ignorant of his father's debts some of the creditors took him as cautioner for these debts. His father has died leaving nothing to him but this burden of debt if he will enter heir thereto. The creditors have used all legal process to compel him to do so, keeping him under hornings so that he cannot go about in the country to transact his business, and he has some important affairs coming before the Lords of Session and other judges. These cautioneries cannot legally bind him, yet he is debarred from doing anything even for the relief of these creditors. He therefore craves their Lordships' protection; and this they grant until 1st August

Now his prosecutors, finding that he is likely to get the better of them, are threatening him with captions and other legal procedure, which will frustrat the hopes of the supplicant and disappoint his creditors, wherefore he craves their Lordships' protection. Supplication by Thomas Gordoun of Dilspro as follows:—He has an action of reduction pending before the Lords of Session against Andrew Gray in Peterhead who has apprised his lands as one of the cautioners of the deceased Adam Gordoun of Boghoill for 2000 merks which were due to Robert Irwing, lawful son of Mr. Richard Irwing of Hiltoun, assigned by him to Thomas Thoiris, who transferred the debt to the said Andrew Gray and the deceased James Walker. They, by the conditions of the assignation to them were bound to “discuss” the said Adam Gordoun before distressing the supplicant; but although Adam Gordoun lived six years after the debt came into their hands they never interfered with him. The supplicant’s case is about to be heard, but Gray has taken out letters of horning against him and a warrant that he shall obtain no suspension without consignation, ignoring the obligation in his titles of first discussing Adam Gordoun. The supplicant has obtained a locus standi in the case from the said Lords, but is prevented from seeing and advising with his advocates and acting as a free person in this matter by reason of the foresaid horning, and therefore craves their Lordships’ protection. Complaint by Elizabeth Inglis, wife of Abraham Stewart and widow of Robert Hamiltoun of Brigs, as follows:—On 25th February, 1630, she obtained from their Lordships a decree of separation from her husband, Abraham Stewart, for a year, and for her subsistence and that of her three children by her first husband and of one child by Abraham Stewart, they modified to her the sum of 450 merks which had been provided to her by her first husband from the lands of Brigs. Their Lordships also on 2nd April last by their decree ordained James Hamiltoun, now of Brigs, to pay the said aliment to her. The said Abraham still continues in his wicked disposition towards her, and for a long time on her account has lain in wait for her brother's life, and has sold (as she has been informed) her liferent abovementioned to her prejudice and that of her children. She craves therefore that their Lordships would continue her aliment for the following year, and from

Sempile.

Supplication by Thomas Kirkpatrick of Closburne, as follows:—"His Majesty having been informed of the heavy burden of debt which lay upon his house, whereby it was threatened with utter ruin, was pleased by letter to recommend the taking of some timely course for settling the differences between the supplicant and Bryce Sempill, his principal creditor. Their Lordships had accordingly summoned Sempill before them, and, after hearing parties, remitted to several of their number to take means for settling matters between them, which they have now worthily and honourably done. It only remains that he should make payment of the sum agreed upon to Sempill, for the obtaining of which he must either sell or wadset part of his estate, and as this will require some time he craves their Lordships' protection against certain hornings. The Lords grant him till 1st July next.

Complaint by George Baird of Auchmedden, and George Gregour, his servant, as follows:—"They had cited John Cheyne in Essilmont before their Lordships for "ane insolence" committed by him against them, which being found proven, he was ordained to enter to ward in the tolbooth of Edinburgh. The complainers caused execute the charge, which he disobeyed and "past to the horne." They understand that upon a representation made by him to the Lords that he was not lawfully charged, as he was in Zetland at the time, he has obtained suspension of his horning till 9th June next; which representation is false, as the charge was executed against him personally, and his sole intention is to give the complainers fresh trouble. Seeing he is presently in this burgh it is expedient the suspension be discussed now. The pursuers compearing by Patrick Rankene, servitor to one James Baird, their procurator, and the defender, John Cheyne, also compearing, there was produced the decree by their Lordships finding that the said John Fol. 173, a.

Complaint by Dowglas, widow of Robert Johnstoun of Reacleuche, and Thomas and John Johnstoun, her tenants, as follows:— About four weeks ago William, Earl of Angus, apprehended the said tenants and imprisoned them in the Castle of Dowglas, where they still lie in great misery. He professes to have arrested them by virtue of a commission from their Lordships over such of his own removeable tenants within his baronies of Dowglas, Crawford and Wandell, as are suspected of theft, but the said Dowglas has no dependence upon the said Earl. They have also offered caution to appear before his Majesty's Justice and answer to any crimes to be laid to thair charge, but the said Earl will listen to no offers. The pursuers compearing by Mungo Johnstoun, their brother, and the Earl of Angus being also personally present, the latter declared that he apprehended the two Johnstouns foresaid with the fang of a stolen horse, and that being tenants of one of his own vassals he has fixed a court for their trial about 15th April next. Mungo Johnstoun replied that he offers to prove by the testimony of witnesses that the said horse was not a stolen horse, and that no one has ever challenged the horse as suche; and, moreover, the pursuers are willing to find caution to answer to any charge upon lawful citation. The Lords, after hearing parties, allow of the taking of the pursuers as prisoners by the Earl of Angus and free him of all danger on that account, but ordain him to put them to liberty, they first finding caution, Thomas Johnstoun in 1000 merks and John Johnstoun in £500 that they will appear before the Commissioners of the Middle Shires in a Justice Court to be held by them at Lanark on 15th April next and answer upon a charge of theft and reset of theft, and that they will not molest Mungo Wilsoun in .

On 24th February last the said George Buchannan, in presence of their Lordships, bound himself that before this 17th of March he would find Sir John Buchannan of that Ilk, William Livingstoun of Kilsyth and Walter M^cAwlay of Ardincaple, cautioners for payment of this sum, interest thereof and expenses, under the penalty of £100 in addition, and this he had not done. Parties compearing, the said George Buchannan declared that he had on 12th March made a real offer to the pursuer of the principal sum of 2550 merks, and 255 merks as a year's interest thereof from Whitsunday last to Whitsunday next, and with regard to the penalty and expenses, he offered to subscribe a submission to Alexander, Earl of Linlithgow, and Adam, Bishop of Dumblane; but the pursuer refused to accept payment without the penalty, and would not agree to the proposed submission, as an instrument under the hand of David Watsoun, notary, produced to their Lordships, bears. The Lords after hearing parties ordain the said George Buchannan to have the said principal sum and a year's interest thereof in readiness and to pay the same to the pursuer within the burgh of Dumbartane before Tuesday week at night under a penalty of £300; and as touching the penalty and expenses they ordain the same to be submitted to the arbitration of the said Earl of Linlithgow and Bishop of Dumblane, taking the parties bound to abide by their decision.

Supplication

by Sir Hew Wallace of Craigie for protection to himself and his cautioners.

Their Lordships granted to him their protection for attending upon the Lords of Exchequer to receive payment of £20,000 for his surrender of the office of bailiary of Kyle Stewart and regality of Newtown. This sum he was and is still willing to assign for satisfaction of his creditors, and to this end their Lordships also granted protection to his cautioners underwritten. The business has not yet been dealt with by the Lords of Exchequer, and so he craves a prolongation of their Lordships' protection to him and them. This the Lords grant till 6th June next, viz.—to the said supplicant; to William Wallace of Ellerslie, William Wallace of Prestikschaw, Robert Wallace of Barnweill, Robert Wallace of Brighous and John Tait of Adamehill, cautioners for him to David Cuninghame, servitor to his Majesty, for 4500 merks; to the said William Wallace of Ellerslie, Mr. John Hamiltoun, minister at Cragie, Andrew Crawford of Drings, Mr. John Chalmers of Poquharne, and Paul Glover of Trinitieland, cautioners for him to Nicol Edward, merchant burges of Edinburgh, for 2000 merks and to William Cuningham of Drongans for 500 merks; and to the said William Wallace of Ellerslie, Robert Wallace of Barnweill, John Wallace of Sheillis, James Wallace of Dulleres, and Andrew Crawford of Drings, cautioners for him to William Gray and Robert Smith, merchants in Edinburgh, for 500 merks.

Now, in "that unhappie conflict" which moved their Lordships to take this step he had no concern whatever. "George Buchannan, his brother, ane young boy of 16 yeeres of age, being travelling throw the Kings hieway from Lany to the place of Forgie in a peaceable maner, accompanied onelie with umquhill Duncane Buchannan and tua young boyes, they were sett upon be Drummanerinoch and his complices, all armed with unlawfull weapouns and cruellie persewed of thair lyfes, and the said umquhill Duncane killed and his brother tane prisouner." Moreover, the amount of caution is far above his rank, he being but "ane meane gentleman," unable to relieve his cautioner, and can get no one to undertake for him. He craves that their Lordships will modify his caution. This the Lords do, to 3000 merks.

Supplication by John Campbell of Caddell, as follows:—The late King James, by charter under the great seal, dated 1614, disposed to Sir John Campbell of Cadell, knight, the supplicant's father, in feu, the isle of Ila, to be held of his Majesty in free barony as the Barony of Ila, with the house of Dynniveg as the chief messuage. Thereafter the deceased Sir James M^cConnell, assisted by Coill M^cGillespick and a number of the rebels of the Clandonnald, violently surprised and took the said house of Dynniveg, and having furnished it with men and provisions, held it as a house of war. His late Majesty having sent his forces for its reduction, with cannon and other warlike provision from Ireland, recovered the said house, and many of the principal rebels and traitors were apprehended and suffered the due course of justice. Understanding also that the said house had in former times been a centre of sedition, his late Majesty thought it meet that it should be utterly demolished so as no longer to afford shelter to traitors. This work was recommended to the supplicant's said father, but he, being but newly entered in the isle, and it not being peopled with those of his own friendship, and moreover, having no safe place of residence therein but the said house, was withheld from accomplishing that purpose. Now his said father has disposed this isle to him, and it has been peopled with a number of his own friends, with whose assistance he thinks he will be able to withstand any new assault intended against him while he remains within the isle. His affairs require his frequent resort to the Lowlands, but he is in continual fear of some new attempt to surprise the said house, as only last summer, during his absence attending the Session, a number of the disorderly thieves and limmers of the Yles gave a fearful assault to the said house, and would have taken it and originated another commotion and rebellion in these parts but for the care and dilligence of his servants in making a fierce and courageous defence. As the house is his own he may indeed do therewith as he thinks fittest for the peace and safety of the isle, yet being loath to do anything in such a matter without his Majesty's approbation he has obtained a letter from his Majesty recommending to their Lordships to do therein whatsoever should seem best. The supplicant intends building a more commodious house for his own dwelling in a more proper part of the isle; and for this and other causes foresaid he craves their Lordships' warrant for demolishing the said house. The Lords, considering the danger and menace to the public peace by the standing of the said house, think it meet and expedient that it be cast down, and give commission and warrant to the said John Campbell of Caddell accordingly, "so that it serve not heerafter for a beild, ressett or starting hole to the rebellis of the Yles."

follows :—The provost and bailies of Forfar, alleging that in September 1625 they obtained a decret of their Lordships ordaining that the sheriff courts of Forfar should be held in the burgh of Forfar, have charged the complainers to hold their courts in the tolbooth of Forfar under pain of horning. Now to the obtaining of that pretended decret neither the sheriff of Forfar for the time nor the noblemen and barons of the shire, whom the removal of the sheriff courts from Dundee to Forfar chiefly concerns, were cited, and thereby such a decret is void in itself, the party not having been first heard. If they had been cited they would have appeared and proponed, as they now do, that the said sheriff courts having been held past memory of man in Dundie, as the most proper and convenient place for the administration of justice to the inhabitants of the said shire, cannot be transferred to Forfar without the express authority of Parliament. Moreover, though it may appear that by Act of Parliament the sheriff is bound to keep the three head courts at the head burgh of the shire, yet this does not prevent him in the right of his office from holding his other courts wherever the necessity of his Majesty's service and the convenience of the lieges may require. To oblige the lieges to pursue in Forfar and nowhere else, often for such small sums as merchant accounts and such like, would entail great hardship on the poor, and more than annul any benefit they could receive from justice. Further, it would often be very inconvenient for the complainers to repair to Forfar, their presence being so frequently required elsewhere in the duties of their office. They have only before their eyes the good of his Majesty's service and the welfare of the lieges; and as they have found caution, each in 500 merks, that if after discussing of the question the Lords find that they ought to do the same, they will obey: they crave suspension of the horning. Charge having been given to Andrew Hunter, provost, and William Hunter and James Bannerman, bailies of Forfar, and they compearing by Mr. David Persoun, town clerk of Forfar, Mr. James Baird, their procurator, and John Mill, one of the council of Forfar, and the said Thomas Fotheringhame of Powrie also compearing with Mr. John Russell, his procurator, and insisting mainly upon their first reason, viz.—the nullity of the said decret for the reason foresaid, and the said decret being produced and bearing that only the provost and bailies of Dundie were cited as parties and not the Sheriff of Forfar, the Lords, after hearing parties, grant suspension as craved.

Complaint by the provost and bailies of Forfar, for themselves and in name of the council and community of the said burgh, as follows :—
In the sixth Parliament of the late King James it is ordained that every sheriff in the kingdome shall have "ane honest and famous man to be his clerk," who by himself or a sufficient depute shall always be resident within the head burgh of the shire for receiving and registering hornings, relaxations, and otherwise serving his Majesty's lieges.

of Powrie, Sheriff of Forfar, against the provost and bailies of Forfar, who allege that the said burgh is the lawful place for the holding of the sheriff courts of the shire of Forfar.

Complaint by the provost and bailies of Forfar against William Gray, sheriff-clerk, who refuses to reside within the said burgh, in contravention of the law.

Fol. 184, a.

Now the burgh of Forfar is the head burgh of the sheriffdom of Forfar, and the complainers have purchased decreets from their Lordships ordaining that all the sheriff courts shall be held within that burgh; yet William Gray, the present Sheriff Clerk, in contempt of the said act refuses, either by himself or a sufficient depute, to reside within the said burgh. Parties being cited and the pursuers compearing by Mr. David Persoun, their procurator, and the said Mr. William Gray compearing personally, the Lords, after hearing parties, ordain William Gray, either by himself or his sufficient depute, to make his residence in the burgh of Forfar in terms of the act, and allow him till 1st May next for his removal thither.

Supplication by William, Earl Marishell, as follows:—He intends to build a bulwark and to repair the harbour of Peterheid, which is one of the special ports in the north parts for ships in time of storm and other important occasions, but he cannot procure sufficient timber for the purpose, except from Norway. Owing to the prohibition there of all export of timber unless victuall is imported in exchange he can obtain none unless their Lordships grant him their license to export thither twenty chalders of victual, half beir and half meal, and this he accordingly craves. The Lords, willing to further the said Earl's "honnourable resolutioun," grant him warrant as craved; Robert Keith, Writer to the Signet, becoming cautioner, entered in the books of Secret Council, for the said Earl, that he will bring timber from Norway for the purpose above written, under the penalty of the payment of the price of the victual so to be exported.

On 25th January last their Lordships ordained him to come to an agreement with the complainers and accept a reasonable satisfaction, but he utterly refuses to accept any. They accordingly caused some workmen to commence operations, but the said Mr. John had come to the poor men and threatened them with hanging if they proceeded any further. Both parties compearing and submitting to the said Lords the satisfaction to be given for the bog, the Lords ordain the pursuers to pay to the defender £40 for his right thereto.

Fol. 58, b. “ Anent the supplicatioun presented to the Lords of Secret Counsell be James Crichtoun of Fendraucht, makand mentioun that where it Supplication pleased the said Lords for the better tryell and discoverie of the persouns by the Laird guiltie of that cruell murder and burning of the Lord Melgame, Rothemay of Frendraught and others within the supplicants hous and towre of Fendraucht to ordaine for the and appoint by twa severall acts that Johne Toshe, his servitour, and putting to the Johne Meldrum of Ridhill sould be putt to the tortour of the bootes, torture of according whereunto the said Johne Toshe is alreadie tortured, and who, John Meldrum as the supplicant is informed, hes declared nothing induring his suffering that he may that may argue the least suspicioun of guiltines in him of that execrable give his fact. And whereas it now rests that according to the saids Lords thair evidence anent ordinance the said Johne Meldrum sould lykewayes be putt to the tortour, the burning of whiche nevertheles hes bene hitherto shifted and delayed, the supplicant Frendraught.
humbelie offers unto the saids Lords thair consideratioun how farre he is interested in his credite and the course of justice wronged by that forbearance, considering that there is no worldlie thing whair of the suppli-cant is more zealousie carefull than to have that hiddin mysterie brought to a cleere light. And seing there is vehement and pregnant presump-tious aganis the said Johne Meldrum that he is guiltie and accessorie to the said fact, who being now weake and infirme and in the conscience of his guiltines apprehending the pane of the tortour and the shame and ignominie that will accompanie his death if he sall come to a confessioun of the truthe, it may justlie be feared that if his tortour be longer delayed, he may be drawin upoun the foresaids respects desperatlie to make away himselfe by poysoun or otherwayes ; and all after meanes of discoverie being removed by his death the supplicant and his servants, who pleades innocent of the cryme, will be of new againe troubled and scandalized, and the imputatioun thairof will be cassin upon the supplicant by the power and malice of his enemeis, who, he wishes, wer als carefull to finde out the guiltie as they ar violentlie fordward to fasten the blame thairof upon him, and to make him debtour for the same, whairby they may have some pretext to keepe him in a perpetuall trouble to his utter wracke and undoing. And whereas the tortouring of Johne Toshe wes pressed with great vehemencie the course of justice now requires that the said Johne Meldrum sould lykewayes goe to the tortour, whiche being ministred unto him in that measure whiche Johne Toshe received it, the supplicant doubts not bot he will give a greater light than hitherto hes beene had in that unhappie bussines. Not that the supplicant craves this aganis him (as he protests to God) for anie cruell revenge or remembrance of the indigniteis and wrongs he hes done unto him ; he is free of all suche side respects and is onelie led thairto out of a desire to heve the truthe cleered for releefe of the innocent and punishment of the guiltie. Humbelie desyryng thairfoir the saids Lords that thay would be favourablie pleased presentlie to proceid to the tryell and tortouring of the said Johne Meldrum and not to deferre nor delay the same anie longer, otherwayes he heere protests and declares that if the said Johne Meldrum sall happin to be cutt off by death before he be putt to the tortour, that the said supplicant hes done his dewtie and diligence for the discoverie of the fact, and that the not tryell thairof be not impute unto him bot that he may be free of the same for ever ; lykeas at mair lenth is conteanit in the said supplicatioun. Quhilk being read, heard and considerit be the saids Lords and they rypelie advised thairwith, the Lords of Secreit Counsell continewes the answering of that bill till the nixt Counsell day, and in the meanetyme ordains the said supplicant his protestatioun anent the not torturing of the said Johne Meldrum to be insert and registrat in the bookes of Privie Counsell ad futuram rei memoriam.

pearing by Mr. Johne Rollock, Commissary of Dumblane, her procurator, and the defender not compearing, the Lords ordain him to be charged to enter into ward within the Castle of Blacknesse, and to render his houses upon pain of forfeiture.

Complaint by Alexander Cochrane of that Ilk, as follows:—The complainer undertook to relieve John Knox of Ramferlie at the hands of his creditors of the sum of 22,000 merks, and Knox gave the complainer a discharge duly signed. This discharge was in the complainer's possession on 2nd April instant, when John Knox earnestly desired inspection of it. The complainer, esteeming Knox a gentleman of good credit, and looking for no unworthy action from him, produced the discharge, whereupon Knox violently snatched it out of his hand, tore it in pieces, and so destroyed it, intending thereby to bring the complainer under the danger of paying the 22,000 merks. Pursuer appearing, but not the defender, and certain witnesses having been examined, the Lords find the defender guilty as libelled, and so of having committed a very great offence, for which they ordain him to enter in ward within the tolbooth of Edinburgh until order be taken with him, and if he fail to do so, he is to be put to the horn and escheat.

Complaint by Thomas, Earl of Haddington, against Thomas Stewart in Earliston and others for cutting down and carrying off trees on lands of the complainer.

Complaint by Thomas, Earl of Hadintoun, Lord Privie Seal, as follows:—In violation of the laws against the cutting and destroying of green wood, policy and planting, Thomas Stewart in Ersiltoun, and George Lindsey and Walter Scheill there, on December last, went to the said Earl's wood of Sorrolesfeild, and the said Thomas cut three ash trees and six great oak trees and carried them away upon three horses and an ox; at the same time James Thomesoun in Ersiltoun cut twelve oaks and birches and took them home to Ersiltoun; on 12th January last James Purves in Ersiltoun cut in the said wood twelve oaks and birches and carried them to Ersiltoun, and at the same time William and Andrew Purves in Ersiltoun cut a great tree and carried it away with them; further, on 7th April last, the said Thomas Stewart, accompanied with the said Walter Scheill and David Burnet in Ersiltoun, cut five great oak trees and carried them away from the said wood; and on 13th April, James Adinstoun in Ersiltoun cut and took away thence two great ash and "allar" (elder) trees. Moreover, the said persons with Mark Home, son of the late Laird of Coldingknowes, John Fisher in Sorrolesfeild, John Kyle called Bastard, and Thomas Purves called Quhytepeill, between the months of December and April last inclusive, cut down great numbers of ash, birch, oak, and elder trees, and disposed of them at their pleasure. Charge having been given to the said Mark Home, Thomas Stewart, Walter Scheill, James Thomesoun and Thomas Purves, and the pursuer compearing personally but none of the defenders, after the examination of several witnesses the Lords find the defenders guilty as libelled and ordain them to enter, within six days after being charged, into ward in the tolbooth of Edinburgh, and there remain until they be lawfully freed.

Complaint by Robert Goddie, merchant burges of Edinburgh, as follows:—He has been long kept in ward in the tolbooth of Edinburgh by Mr. William Kellie, Writer to the Signet, for not paying him the sum of 1000 merks of principal and the interest thereof, in terms of a bond granted by John Lowrie, merchant, as principal, and the complainer as cautioner. The bond is more than thirty years old, and the complainer is informed that the said Mr. William Kellie has received payment of it; and that, notwithstanding, he has raised inhibition against the principal party, of whom he has full security of his lands. It is therefore out of mere malice that he so treats the complainer, who is a poor aged man of fourscore years, and like to starve in ward. Charge having been given to the said Mr. William Kellie and John Rind, one of the bailies of Edinburgh, and both pursuer and defender compearing, and Kellie agreeing to liberate the pursuer, the Lords ordain the provost and bailies of Edinburgh to put him to liberty, so far at least as he is warded at the defender's instance.

Complaint by Robert Goddie, merchant burges of Edinburgh, against Mr. William Kellie, Writer to the Signet, for illegal warding.

Complaint by Mr. George Black, minister at Dunscoir, as follows:—John Moffat in Craiginputtock, a person excommunicated for disobedience to the Kirk, has for several years past behaved himself very insolently and disgracefully towards the complainer, his pastor, for no other cause than the faithful discharge of his calling. On _____, when the complainer was baptising a child at the kirk of Dunscore, the said John, accompanied by Harbert Hannay, his tenant, came into the kirk, "and whill the minister wes in the verie actioun of celebrating the sacrament of baptisme he tooke the lawer aff its proper place in the pulpit, and to the contempt of that holie actioun despitefullie slang the lawer with the water being in the same in the midds of the kirk." Further, he and his said tenant continually break down the churchyard walls and feed their cattle and sheep within the same, defiling and abusing the churchyard with the dung of their bestial as if it were a fold or byre. Charge having been given to the said Herbert Hannay as party, and to Thomas Greir and John Lindsey in Lagane and John and Thomas Smith in Kiroy, as witnesses, and the pursuer compearing, but not the defender nor the witnesses, the Lords ordain them to be put to the horn and escheat.

Complaint by Mr. George Black, minister at Dunscore, against John Moffat, and Herbert Hannay, servant to the said John, for insolent behaviour.

Complaint by Peter Sinclare in Quhytkirk as follows:—On 27th May last, in passing the wood of Presminen, he saw some cut horse-wands, and asked William Arnot and William Knowis, "fosters of the said wod," for liberty to take them away. This, with the consent of Hew Carmichael, chamberlain to James Livingstoun, owner of the woods, they gave. But, as he was coming out of the highway with the said chamberlain, William Dicksoun in Beill, accompanied by Alexander Cromie, Robert Fairbrand, Robert Grim, servitor to the said Alexander, and Robert Cromie, to the number of thirty persons, invaded and pursued him for his life, "ragged him aff his hors," wounded him in several places to the effusion of blood, took from him his sword and whinger, his purse with fifty dollars therein, a ring worth 500 merks, 15s. sterling and other small money, which they still detain. Charge having been given to the persons above complained upon, and the pursuer and all of them save Robert Grim compearing, the case was referred for proof to the deposition of witnesses. These failing to substantiate any part of the complaint the Lords assolzie the defenders, but ordain them to deliver to the pursuer his sword and whinger which they did in presence of their Lordships.

Counter-complaint by William Dickson in Biel and James Livingston, his master, against Peter Sinclair for assault.

Counter-complaint by William Dicksoun in Beill, and James Livingstoun of Beill, his master, for his interest, as follows:—In violation of the laws against cutting and destroying of green wood, etc., on 25th April last Peter Sinclare in Quhytkirk, accompanied by two footmen, came to the said James Livingstoun's woods of Presminen, and destroyed and carried away a great number of growing trees. In doing so they were accidentally met at Kempshill by the pursuer and others of the complainer's servants, who modestly inquired of them why they thus violated his Majesty's laws. Upon this Peter Sinclare drew his sword and made several strokes at the said William Dicksoun, wounding him on the hand to the effusion of his blood. On the 27th of the same month Andrew Home, brother-in-law of the said Peter, came to the barnyards of Beill, purposely to take some dishonourable advantage of the said William, and threatened to take his life. And on 7th May last the said Peter and Andrew came to Hadintoun, where a public market was being kept that day, and eagerly sought for the complainer's tenants there to have taken their lives. Further, in contempt of the complainer, they cause their friends in the Merce to come riding through his lands and wood foresaid, so as to terrify his tenants and force them to lay his lands waste. William Dicksoun and Peter Sinclare compearing, and the matter being referred to the probation of witnesses, the Lords find that the said Peter Sinclare took away the wands foresaid from the pursuer's wood, and drew a sword and struck at the said William Dicksoun therewith, and for this insolence they ordain him to be committed to ward until he be relieved. They also ordain him to pay two merks to each of the witnesses. Andrew Home, who was also cited but failed to appear, they ordain to be put to the horn and escheat.

Complaint by David Finlayson, baker in Leith, and his wife against Cristall Johnstone, skipper, for assault.

Complaint by David Finlasoun, baker in Leith, and Margaret Stevinson, his wife, as follows:—On April last they were passing the house of Cristall Johnestoun, skipper in Leith, when, without any cause, the said Cristall came to them and after upbraiding them with "contumelious and disgracefull speeches," pursued the said David with a drawn dirk, struck at him several times therewith, and when his wife stepped in between them "he gave the honest woman ane cruell wound with the durke on the hand whairwith he almost cutted aff her thoumbe." The pursuers compearing but not the defender, the Lords ordain him to be denounced his Majesty's rebel and escheat.

Complaint by Sir David Livingstoun of Donypace, knight baronet, as follows:—He has been in peaceable possession of the teinds of the lands of Skaithmure for several years past, and the tenants thereof having made lawful requisition to him under form of instrument to collect and lead his teinds, as his other urgent affairs hindered him from doing so at the time, he allowed the tenants themselves to lead them on the condition, to which they willingly agreed, that each of them should preserve his own portion thereof safely till the complainer gave direction about the same. The tenants accordingly led the teinds to their barnyard of Skaithmure after that William Mowat, George Groser and Thomas Duncan, the complainer's servants and teind-masters, had delivered the same to them. Nevertheless, Alexander Mure of Skaithmure, being informed of this, resolved by bangsterie and oppression to seize the said teinds, and accordingly on September last he assembled some forty or fifty persons, among whom were William Seller, burges of Linlithgow, James Mure there, Charles Seller in Stanehous, Sir John Hamiltoun of Grange, James and George Hamilton, his sons, Mr. Alexander Hamiltoun, brother to the said Sir John, and Alexander Hamiltoun, his son, who on horse and foot, armed with lances, jacks, steelbonnets and other weapons, came in warlike manner under silence of night to the said barnyards of Skaithmure, and "kuist the compleaners whole teinds, tred the same with thair hors feit, destroyed the most part thair of and the small remanent they caried away with thame." This was the account the complainers teindmasters fore-said received from the tenants when, on 26th September last they went to carry away the said teinds and found nothing. Charge having been given to the persons above complained upon, and all compearing with the pursuer except the said Alexander Mure (who for this cause is ordained to be put to the horn and escheat), the Lords, after hearing parties, remit to the judge ordinary the trial of the civil rights of parties to the teinds in question, and reserve to themselves the punishment of the wrong done after the discussing of the civil right.

Complaint by William Mitchelhill, burgess of Selkirk, as follows:—On 1st April last William Curroure, Bessie Saidler, his wife, John Dunlop, Robert and William Ker, David Broun and James Wod, younger, all in Lundene, armed with swords, staves and great kents, came to the King's Medowes within the territory of Selkirk and assaulted the complainer and pursued him for his life, "gave him bauche, blae and bloodie straiques in diverse parts of his bodie with thair rungs and stones, speciallie hurt him with ane rung upon the hand to the great effusioun of his blood, chaist him with great stones to Selkirk, where for saulfetie of his lyfe he wes forced to take his hous on his head, quhairupon they kuist in great stones at the windowes and doores and thairwith hurt and woundit the compleaner and Margaret Mitchelhill, his daughter." The pursuer compearing and of the defenders the said William Curroure, Robert Ker, John Dunlop, David Broun, and James Wod, and probation being referred to the evidence of witnesses, who failed to substantiate the complaint, the Lords assoilzie the defenders.

Counter-complaint by William Curroure in Lundene and Bessie Saidler, his wife, as follows:—On 5th April last William Mitchelhill in Selkirk "violentlie reft ane naig" belonging to the complainer from the lands of Lundene, and the complainer, to know the reason, followed him to the lands of Gatts. When Mitchelhill saw him, he directed one of those who were with him to run away with the nag, "and he himselfe fiercelie sett upon the honest man, gave him manie bauche and blae straiques in diverse parts of his bodie, speciallie ane great strake on the foreheid with ane forke whairwith he felde him to the ground, brake the forke upon him and with ane splent thairof wounded him on the brow to the effusioun of his blood, and left him lying as deid upon the ground." Both pursuers and defender compearing, and they and several witnesses being heard, the Lords find that the said William Mitchelhill struck the said William Curroure with a fork and fine him £10, to be paid to the said William Curroure, and further ordain him to pay 40s to each of the witnesses.

Complaint by Robert Grant, coach harnesser in the Cannogait, and Marie Cooke, his wife, as follows:—On 31st May last Gabriel Blair in the Cannogait came to their dwelling-house there, and putting violent hands upon the said Marie, threw her to the ground and struck her on the body "manie bauche and blaë straiques." He also took away "ane kist" from the said dwelling-house containing money, writs, clothing and other things, valued at over £400. This the said Gabriel did after he had, by William Blair, messenger, poynded the complainers' house for a sum of £7 alleged to be due by him to Janet Galbraith, his mother, for the rent of the said house, notwithstanding that the complainer had a discharge thereof, which he would not permit the said Marie to look out and show him. Further, he complains that in the lease by the said Janet Galbraith to the complainer of the said house, and which the said Gabriel keeps on behalf of his mother, he has inserted £22 of yearly duty with expenses and registration, nothing of which is contained in the lease delivered to the complainer, and so the said Gabriel, being both writer and notary thereto, has deceived the complainer, a poor ignorant man, who can neither read nor write. Both pursuers and defender compearing, and they and witnesses being heard, the Lords find that the said Gabriel Blair illegally took away the "kist" foresaid without a lawful form of poynding, committing thereby "ane great insolence of ane evill and wicked exemple," and ordain him to replace it and all its contents, until the arrestment made thereupon by Robert Grant be orderly loosed; but they assoilzie him from the charge of hurting and wounding Marie Cooke, as the same was not substantiated by the evidence.

Complaint by Robert Grant, coach-harness maker in the Canongate, and his wife, Mary Cook, against Gabriel Blair for stealing a box and for assault.

Complaint by James Baillie of Park, as follows:—He has been long detained in ward in the tolbooth of Edinburgh for not fulfilling a decret obtained from their Lordships against him by his wife, Katharine Hamiltoun, to secure her in the just half of his lands of Parke, Achintiber and Corsbasket, for her aliment during their not cohabiting together, and the aliment of her three daughters, and for payment of 1000 merks of debt. Now, the truth is that whenever he was charged in terms of the said decret he made offer to his said wife of the half of his said estate, to be paid to her as follows:—By John Miller, tenant and occupier of a part of the lands of Auchentibber and Parke, fifteen bolls of victual (being eleven bolls of meal and four of) and six fowls; by that part of the lands possessed by the complainer himself eight bolls of meal and two-and-a-half bolls of beir; by James Hender-

soun, for the lands of Achintibber occupied by him, ten-and-a-half bolls of meal, two bolls of beir and four fowls; by James Dick, two bolls of meal and four fowls; by that part of the lands of Corsbasket sometime occupied by Mr. James Lindsey, and presently by the complainer himself, twenty bolls of meal, six bolls of beir and ten fowls; by Andrew Riddell, £24; by John Arbuckle, three bolls of beir and 53s. 4d. money, and by John Wilkie in Corsbasket, a boll of oats; reserving to the complainer the dwelling-house and yards of Corsbasket; and of these he has signed a perfect assignation and disposition to his said wife, which he will produce. Moreover, the said Katharine is presently in possession of the half of his estate, and yet at the instigation of her friends she intends to utterly undo him by still keeping him under the foresaid horning, so that his escheat and liferent may fall into the hands of Lord Blantyre, his superior. Parties compearing and having been heard, the Lords ordain their first decretit to stand in force in all points, "and for this effect decerns and ordains the said defender [sic] to make, seale, subscribe and delyver to the said persewer [sic] ane sufficient reall right be chartour and seasing with sufficient claus of warrandice of her said halfe of his estait and living designed to her be the said decretit of divisioun, and to consigne in the hands of the Clerk of Counsell the hail evidents and writts of his lands, teinds and living upon inventar to remane in the Clerkes hands for the furdur warrand and securitie of the said defender in the peaceable possessioun of her said designed and modified living." Further, the pursuer for the further security of the defender therein becomes acted under a penalty of 2000 merks that he will not molest her, nor her tenants or servants, and will appear before their Lordships whenever charged and answer to any complaint against him by his said spouse. With reference to the burden of eleven bolls of victual pertaining in liferent to John Lindsey in Blantyre and appointed to be paid out of the lands of Corsbasket, the Lords ordain that each of the parties shall pay the equal half thereof during the lifetime of the said John Lyndsey.

Complaint by Robert Patersoun in Auchlyne and James Patersoun, his son, as follows:—On 25th December last Robert Smith at the Mill of Leslie, Patrick and Andrew Smith in Auchlyne, his brothers, James Smith there, and Patrik Gib and Edward Thomesoun, servitors to the said Patrick Smith, lay in wait for the complainers between their dwelling-house and the kirk of Clatt for the purpose of taking their lives. As the complainers were going to the kirk to hear the sermon these persons fiercely set upon them and having first disarmed the said James by taking from him his sword and whinger, they set upon his said father, a man past three score fifteen years of age, and cruelly "woundit the honest aged man with rungs, dang him deid to the ground thairwith and so damneist, birsed and bruised him with bauche and blae straikes as he hes ever sensyne lyne bedfast in great pane and dollour and extreme perrell of his lyfe." They also wounded the said James with their swords upon the head, left hand, elbow and other parts of his body, to the great effusion of his blood and peril of his life. Charge having been given to the persons complained upon, and James Patersoun compearing for himself and his father, and Robert Smith compearing for himself and in name of the other defenders; and parties having been heard, the Lords find that the case has already been tried before the sheriff of _____ and his deputes, and that the said Robert Smith was convicted of "hurting and blooding" of the said James Patersoun, and fined £50 therefor, which went to the said sheriff and his deputes; but inasmuch as there was no satisfaction given to the pursuers, the Lords ordain Robert Smith and the other defenders to pay to them 100 merks before 10th July next. Failing punctual payment, they ordain the said Robert Smith for himself and in name of the other defenders to pay them £100 precisely at Lammas next. They further ordain both parties to find caution in £100 for each other's indemnity; and the defenders to deliver up to the pursuers their weapons.

Complaint by M^r Roger Mowat, advocate, as follows:—On 13th August, 1622, John Carruthers of Holmends, was put to the horn at the instance of John Fluiker, burgess of Edinburgh, for non-payment of 500 merks of principal, with interest thereof and expenses, and 50 merks, contained in two bonds made thereupon, which bonds Fluiker assigned to the complainer; but Carruthers pays no heed to the said horning. The pursuer compearing by Andrew Ritchie, his servant, but Carruthers, though cited as defender, not compearing, the Lords ordain letters of caption to be issued to the Steward of Annerdail and his deputes against him.

Complaint by Sir Thomas Hope of Craighall, King's Advocate, and William Trotter in Blaikburnerig, the party grieved, as follows:—In contravention of the laws against wearing of hagbuts and pistols on 17th May last, while the said William was attending his business beside the ground of Blaikburnerig, alone and unarmed, Uthrid M'Dougall of Mondurke came riding upon horseback towards him with a hagbut in his hand, accompanied by Adam and Alexander Paxtoun, his servants, who were armed with swords. When he came near, Mondurke lighted off his horse, "bendit his hacquebutt and presented it to the compleaners face intending to have shott him throw the head, bot he having started aside, he shott him throw the thigh," in which he left five and twenty drops of lead, and caused great effusion of his blood. He further gave the complainer a great many strokes with a drawn sword in several part of his body and would have slain him if some persons had not seasonably come to his relief. The pursuer compearing personally but none of the defenders, the Lords ordain the latter to be denounced and escheat.

Thereupon Bernard Lindsey, now in Leith, armed with a pair of pistols and a sword came to him and desired to speak with him in a friendly manner, as he alleged, but he very treacherously assailed him, and would have slain him if the complainer had not closed with him and disarmed him of his sword. know for what he was to be indicted, it was refused. The complainer, therefore, believing that this citation was super inquirendis, and so illegal, did not appear, as it is notour that he received a notable wrong at the command and direction of the magistrates of Edinburgh and Leith and that they cannot, on that account, be lawful judges to him. Charge having been given to Alexander Clerk, provost of Edinburgh, and Andrew Simpsoun and Gilbert Achesoun, two of the bailies of the said burgh, for themselves and in name of the remaining bailies, and Gilbert Williamesoun and John Inglis, bailies of Leith, and these persons and the pursuer compearing, they represented that of late there having been some breach of the peace between the pursuer and Bernard Lindsey in the town of Leith they summoned both parties before them to find caution for keeping the peace; that Bernard Lindsey obeyed, but as the pursuer did not, they fined him £20. The Lords, after hearing parties, find and declare that the provost and bailies of Edinburgh as barons of Leith, and sheriffs and justices of the peace within their own bounds, have good right and may justly charge "the supplicant, who dwellis in Leith," to find caution for keeping of the peace, especially after there has been a riot; and they remit him to the bailies of Leith, ordaining him to find caution in the town books of Leith for keeping the peace under a penalty of 500 merks.

Complaint by Andrew Andersoun, hatmaker, burges of Edinburgh, as follows:—On 13th June instant he was standing at his booth door doing his business, when John Mitchell, one of the officers of Edinburgh, who alleged that he was employed by James Narne, burges thereof, to execute an act of warding, violently seized the complainer, "dumped him with his hands on the breast, he being ane old sickelie man, and harled him up the streit to the tolbuith." The complainer showed him a suspension against the said James Narne as yet undiscussed, and he also showed it to Nicol Udward, one of the bailies of Edinburgh, but they refuse to acknowledge it, and still keep the complainer in ward, to his heavy hurt and prejudice. Charge having been given to the said Nicol Udward and William [sic] Mitchell, and the pursuer compearing by Margaret Craig, his wife, and the said John Mitchell also appearing, but not Nicol Udward, the Lords, after hearing parties and witnesses upon the showing of the suspension, find that the said suspension, duly executed and indorsed, was produced and shown to the said John Mitchell, who, notwithstanding thereof, carried the complainer to ward wrongfully, and they accordingly ordain the provost and bailies of Edinburgh to liberate the pursuer until the reasons of the suspension are discussed.

Having taken them by the head to lead them to the cross for apprising them, the said James Blaikie, stabler, violently took them from him, and though the messenger warned him to desist, and charged him to concur in the execution of his Majesty's letters, he refused and would have riven the letters, saying that in spite of any warrand whatsoever he would keep the said horse and mare, and that he would avow and abide by the said deforcement. Then the said Robert took the horse, and, putting his servant upon it, caused him to ride off with it. Complaint by Robert Johnstoun in Middlegill and William Hamiltoun in Ellitschaw, his cautioner, as follows:—About four years ago the said Robert lived on the lands of Over Cleuche pertaining to William, Earl of Angus, and the levies for Denmark, being then in hand, the said Earl burdened him to furnish some men, which he would willingly have done but could not, because his sons were not sufficiently grown, and his servants were so useful to him that he could not, without his great hurt, want them. For this cause the Earl conceived a hatred and grudge against him, and because he could not directly injure him he resolved to do so under colour of justice. He accordingly cited him to appear at a justice court to be held at Dowglas Castle on a charge of super inquirendis, and although this was an illegal citation, yet conscious of his innocency of any crime the complainer freely entered himself at the said court and offered himself for trial on any charge that could be preferred against him. The said Earl, however, having nothing to lay to his charge, dismissed him, after taking the said William Hamiltoun as cautioner for his re-entry upon a new summons. Thereafter the complainer removed himself from the said Earl's lands of Over Cleuche, to the lands of Middlegill in Annerdaill belonging to the laird of Johnestoun, where he has now dwelt for the past three years, and so outwith the jurisdiction of the said Earl; yet he has caused his said cautioner exhibit him of new at a justice court held at the Castle of Dowglas on 21st April last upon a similar general charge, and intends to proceed against them, although the complainer is not under his jurisdiction, nor is he one of his removable tenants, against whom the said Earl has lately purchased a commission. If any crime can be laid to his charge the complainer has instantly found caution in the Books of Adjournal to compear before the Justice and his deutes whenever lawfully summoned, and he therefore claims that the said Earl should be discharged from all proceeding against him. Charge having been given to the said Earl of Angus, Weir of Achthisfardell, his bailie, and Adam Weir, called of Little Clyde, his procurator fiscal, and the said Robert Johnestoun compearing personally, and the said Earl of Angus by Mr. John Oliphant, his procurator, and having been heard, the Lords grant advocation of the said pretended action and pursuit of the complainer from the said Earl and his bailies to the Justice General and his deutes, and discharge the said Earl and his bailies of all proceeding against the pursuer and his cautioner until the said pretended libelled pretext be presented before their Lordships, and the pursuer be warned to its production.

possession thereof since the death of her said husband "who departed ^{house and} this lyfe upon the sevint of Januarie last, until the nynt of October ^{carrying off} ^{her son.} now bygane, at quhilk tyme she being troubled and visite with ane unexpressible greefe and sorrow for the lamentable and deplorable death of umquhill Johne Gordoun of Rothemay, her eldest sonne," John Gordoun of Innermerkie and Alexander Gordoun, fiar thereof, taking advantage of this, resolved to put in execution a plot they had concocted against her. Coming to the place of Rothemay and being received therein with "all the showes of freindship and courtesie that the present occasioun could afford, they or ever the said Katharine or anie of her servants wer awar of thame made thameselfes maisters of her hous, reft the keyes of the utter yett frome Williame Finnie, porter, and hes kepted and deteanned the said Katharine, her barnes and servants, as prisouners within the hous, suffering nane to have accesse unto thame nor nane of thame to goe without the yetts bot be thair permissioun and allowance. And upon the sevint day of November last the said Alexander, accompanied with Williame Gordoun, Gilbert Greeve, Alexander Robertsoun, Thomas Shearer and James Guild, his and his fathers servants, and who assisted thame in taking and keeping of the hous, having gone to the hunting for thair recreatioun, they closed the yetts of the said Katharines hous, tooke the keyes with thame and locked her and her servants thairin, where they remained in the qualitie of prisoners that whole day; and the said James Gordoun, sonne to the said Katharine, Issobell and Jeane Gordouns, her daughters, wer debarred frome accesse within the hous. And the said Katharine having just caus of feare and suspicioun that they wanted foode, as indeid they had none, she with great difficultie pat a little boy out at the window to make inquirye and searche for her young sonne, ane young boy of nyne yeeres of age, who as she is trewlie informed, had fasted that whole day and wes brought to the verie point of death for famine. And upon the ellevint of October last the saids Johne and Alexander Gordouns and thair complices brake up ane close almerie wherein the said umquhill Johne Gordoun, her sonne, had his money and writts; and when as the said Katharine fand fault with thair lawlesse and insolent proceedings they threatned to take her lyfe and to harle her out of her bed where she lay for the tyme and to putt her out at the yetts. And upon the twelffe of the said moneth of October the saids persouns violentlie reft and tooke the keyes of her victuall hous and pantrie frome her pantrie man and delyvered thame to Niniane Seatoun, thair awne servant, who is fugitive frome the lawes and at the horne for ane detestable murder committed be him at the kirk of Bourtie, and they gave strait directioun and command to the said Niniane to take the charge of the hous and to keepe the keyes in thair name and to misken the said Katharine and her servants. Lykeas they caused him to meddle and intromett with the haille meale, malt, flowre, butter and all other provisoun being within the hous, and to dispone thairupon to thair use and behove. And upon the fourteene of November the said Alexander Gordoun violentlie reft fra Agnes Forbes, servitric to the said Katharine, the key of her laidner doore, and his servants and complices foresaids tooke furth thair of the whole beiff, butter and hard fishe being within the same. And the same day the said Alexander dang up ane vault doore with his foote, and he and his complices tooke furth thair of all the complainers victualls and furnishing being thairin. And when as she upon occasioun of this extraordinarie usage acquainted be her missive letter her freinds thairwith, the saids persouns for this only caus in the moneths of October and November last threatned her servants with all kynde of rigour and extremitie becaus they caried the saids letters frome her; and in speciall the said Alexander Gordoun threatned to drowne Alexander and Agnes Kelleis, her servants, for carying her letters to the Marqueis of Huntlie. And upon the twentie twa day of November last they patt violent hands in the said Alexander Forbes, her servant, who is ane poore, harmeles and aged man, caryed him to ane chamber, and with ane sword belt shamefullie, cruellie and unmercifullie belted him to the effusioun of his blood and perrell of his lyffe, threatning to make his privie members als great as his head, for carying ane letter of the said Katharines to the Lord Forbes, her brother. And siclyke the said servitour to the said Johne Gordoun of Innermerkie, at his and his sonnes command, reft and away tooke ane of her ky, pastouring for the tyme upon her lyferent lands of Nauchtane; and being impeded be the said Edward Ferquharsoun, her servant, the said shamfullie strake and dang the said Edward and gave him ane number of blaë and bloodie straikes to the perrell of his lyfe. And since the nynt of October last the saids Johne and Alexander Gordouns and thair servants hes medled and intrometted with the cornes being upon the compleaners feilds, in her barns and barnyairds, and hes destroyed ane great quantitie of the same to her heavie hurt. And not content with all thir shamefull and lawlesse oppressiouns they upon the twentie sevint day of November last violentlie reft and tooke frome the compleaner the said James Gordoun, now of Rothemay, her sonne, and keepes and deteanes him, intending now in his minoritie to caus make chois of his curatours at thair humour and accordinglie to make unlawfull dispositioun of his estait and fortouns in thair favours. And they make ane publict avowal of thair doings, saying that the compleaner and all her kin sall never gett reparatioun thair of." Charge having been given to the said John, Alexander and William Gordoun, Gilbert Greeve, Alexander Robertsoun, Thomas Shearer, James Guild and Ninian Seatoun to compear before the Lords, and to the said Lairds of Innermerkie, elder and younger, to produce the said James Gordoun; and the pursuers appearing, viz.—the said Lord Advocate, and the said Katharine Forbes for herself and in the name of the other pursuers; and the defenders, John Gordoun of Inner-merkie, Alexander Gordoun, his son, and Ninian Seatoun being present, the said John Gordoun declaring he would answer also for William Gordoun, Gilbert Greeve, Alexander Robertsoun and Thomas Shearer (but no appearance being made for James Guild), the pursuer declared that she passed from the whole complaint except the taking away from her of her son by violence, and she desired that their Lordships would cause him to be produced. It was affirmed by the said John Gordoun of Innermerkie "that there wes no violence used aganis the said James Gordoun but that he came willingly away with him." The pursuer thereupon referred the truth of this to his oath, and the said John, being sworn, "depouned, grantit and confest that the said James Gordoun come unwillinglie away with him." The Lords therefore ordain him to produce the said James Gordoun before them this day twenty days that they may take order for his education as they may find expedient, under the pane of rebellion.

Complaint by James M^cNair in Meekle Govane, and John M^cNair, his son, and Robert Neilsoun and Janet Bartane, his servants, as follows.—On 6th June instant Sir Walter Stewart of Mynto, accompanied by William Crawford in Meikle Govane, Mr. Alexander Wodcrop, John Purdoun, and James and Robert Nisbitt, came by way of hame-sucken, under cloud and silence of night, to the said James M^cNair's dwelling-house, while he was in bed taking the night's rest, and entering therein, violently drew the complainer out of his bed, and, after giving him "manie bauche and blae straiques in divers parts of his bodie, he being ane sickelie aged man past threescore saxtene yeeres of age, carried him with them to Glasgow, kept him that night prisoner in the dwelling-house of James Stirline, and next day carried him to the dungeon in the castle where he yet is. The same night they went to the house of the said John M^cNair, forcibly broke up the doors and searched for him through all the house for the purpose of taking his life, stogging the beds with swords, daggers and whingers; but missing him they put violent hands on his said servants and carried them away with them as prisoners, they having committed no crime, and these persons having no warrant nor commission to take them. Charge having been given to the said Sir Walter Stewart, William Crawford and Mr. Alexander Wodcrop, and the pursuers James and John M^cNair compearing for themselves and in name of the said Janet Bartane and Robert Moresoun (sic), and the defenders also compearing, it was stated by them that James M^cNair was only committed to ward within the Castle of Glasgow because on being desired by the said Sir Walter Stewart, as bailie of the regality of Glasgow, to find caution for his compearance before him on a charge of cutting and destroying green wood and growing trees belonging to the said William Crawford, he refused to do so. James M^cNair replied that he offered to find caution as desired but that his offer was refused by Sir Walter Stewart, and he referred the truth of this to Sir Walter's oath. He being sworn denied this, wherefore the Lords assoilzie the defenders. They, however, ordain that the trial of the said James McNair on the charge foresaid shall be pursued before themselves or his Majesty's Justice and his deputes, and discharge the said Sir Walter, as bailie of the regality of Glasgow, from proceeding therein, but without prejudice of the privilege and jurisdiction of the Duke of Lennox as bailie principal of the said regality.

Complaint by Thomas Halyburton, portioner of Daloove, as follows:—On 18th April last Mark Halyburton, son of John Halyburton of Mertoun, at the special instigation of his said father and of John Halyburton, apparent of Mertoun, his brother, came to that part of the Water of Tweid, called Corsheuche, belonging to Lord Traquair, where the complainer was fishing, alone and unarmed, and assailed him with a drawn sword, wounding him severely upon the nose and also upon the side of his head, to the great effusion of his blood. He had killed the complainer if he had not happily taken the sword from him and broken it. Parties compearing, the Lords after hearing them find that Mark Haliburton drew a sword and hurt the complainer therewith, and ordain him to be warded in the tolbooth of Edinburgh until he be relieved by them, he having confessed the fact, but saying that the injury was caused by the pursuer's own fault. The Lords, however, assoilzie his father and brother, because on the matter being referred to their oath, they denied having hounded out the said Mark.

Musselburgh.

Supplication by Captain John Maxwell, as follows:—He is employed in his Majesty's service under the Lord Marquis of Hamiltoun, and has levied in the northern parts of this realm fifty soldiers or thereby, who have come over the water and are ready to be embarked at the time appointed. It is very expensive to the supplicant to quarter and maintain these men for so long a time in Edinburgh, the Cannogait, or Leith, and the adjacent towns refuse to receive and lodge the said soldiers at the supplicant's expense unless they are charged by their Lordships to do so. He therefore craves their Lordships' order to the magistrates and inhabitants of Musselburgh to the above effect. The Lords, judging the request reasonable, ordain the bailies, magistrates, and inhabitants of Musselburgh to receive, quarter and lodge the said fifty soldiers on the supplicant's reasonable charges until such time as they are embarked with the rest of the regiment (the said soldiers always behaving themselves dutifully), as they will answer at their peril.

Complaint by Helen Thorebrand against Norman Baptie in Leith for unjust warding.

[This act is misplaced in the Register.]

Complaint by Helen Thorebrand, as follows:—For over fifteen weeks she has been detained within the tolbooth of Leith at the instance of Normand Baptie in Leith for not paying to him £60 which he alleges she is due; while in truthe she is only due him £10. She is now driven to the very point of famishing, having no means nor friendship whereby to procure so much as a loaf of bread. The punishment of her imprisonment is far in excess of any loss the said Normand has sustained by her; and conscience and equity both demand that he either sustain her in ward, or consent to her liberation. The pursuer compeared by Andrew Henderson, her procurator, upon the 21st instant, and the defender, also compearing, then alleged that the pursuer was able to maintain herself in ward “by her awne vertew and industrie.” The Lords having assigned this 23rd day to the defender to prove this, and the pursuer again appearing by her said procurator, but no appearance being made for the defender, the Lords ordain tbe bailies of Leith to put her to liberty.

Complaint by William Trotter of Blackburnrig against Uchtrid M'Dougall of Mondurk for defiance of the horning under which he lies at the instance of the complainer.

Complaint by William Trotter of Blaikeburnerig, as follows:—He raised an action before their Lordships against Uthrid M'Dougall of Mondurke on 9th June instant for carrying unlawful weapons and acts of oppression, which the said Uthrid disregarded, and was accordingly put to the horne. (See ante, p. 233.) Now the said Uthrid has suspended this horning to 5th July next and meanwhile has lodged a complaint against the complainer, charging him to answer thereto this day. He thus seeks to take advantage of the complainer by bringing in his charge before the complainer's, though it was raised long before his. But the complainer is ready now to answer both to it and the suspension. Both parties compearing, and the former process being produced, and William Trotter being asked if he had any proof to lead against the defender on that complaint, declared that he referred the matter to the defender's oath. The defender, having been sworn, confessed that, provoked by some threatening and contumelious speeches by the said William against him, he discharged his hacquebut at him and shot him in the thigh. Upon which confession the Lords find him guilty of a very great offence, and ordain him to pay a fine of 500 merks, of which 100 merks are to go to the King, and 400 to the party, and to find caution for payment hereof, and also for satisfying the surgeon employed in the case. If he fail to find the said caution he is to be presently warded in the tolbooth of Edinburgh.

Complaint by Mr. Robert Udnie of Lamington, as follows :—Their Lordships know that James Grant took from him by way of stouthreif 8000 merks, of which sum he is informed that Alexander Gordoun of Dunkintie at the taking of the said James Grant, medled with £1200 or thereby, certain letters and papers concerning the money, and a "tasse" and silver spoons taken from the complainer, which were in a bonnet case belonging to James Grant in the house of John Allanache, and will not give them up unless he is compelled. The pursuer compearing but not the defender, the Lords ordain him to be put to the horn and escheat.

Complaint by Mr. Robert Udnie of Lamington against Alexander Gordoun of Dunkintie for appropriating certain articles found on James Grant, which belong to the complainer.

Supplication by John Gordon of Embo, as follows :—During the late troubles between him and the Laird of Duffus their Lordships were pleased to put him under caution for keeping the peace, for compearing before them on lawful citation, and for not carrying of forbidden weapons. These quarrels are now fully and finally settled, and "they stand under ane perfyte band of peace and freindship and there is als heartie love interteanned betuix thame as can be betuix anie gentlemen who ar most strictlie bound in freindship." The bond of caution, registered in the Books of Council and Session, the supplicant produces and craves that as the ground of their Lordships' act is now removed, and he, being now his Majesty's peaceable and good subject, is "resolved during the course of his naturall lyfe to continew in a most submissive obedience to his Majestie and his lawes, and there being no subject within the kingdome with whome he hes now anie querrell, this, his act of caution foresaid, may be discharged. The Lords ordain that the act, so far as concerns his keeping the peace and compearing before them, be discharged, but that it remain in force with regard to his not bearing and wearing of hagbuts and pistola.

Supplication by John Gordoun of Embo that his act of caution for keeping the peace with the Laird of Duffus may be discharged on the grounds that they are now friends.

Fol. 219, a.

Supplication by John Grant of Freuchie, knight, as follows :—He stands enacted in their Lordships' books for exhibition of Alaster Grant, rebel, before the first of July next, under the penalty of re-entering to his ward in the Castle of Edinburgh [ante, p. 201]. He has used his utmost diligence in the search, and the said Alaster, finding that he could no longer lurke nor escape, and being visited with heavy sickness, resolved to yield himself to the supplicant. Accordingly on the 19th instant he was brought to Ballachastell in a litter between two horses, grievously sick, and he now lies in the supplicant's said house "bedfast of a fever," as a certificate produced to their Lordships will show, and he cannot, therefore, be brought to their Lordships at present without the hazard of his life. He craves that their Lordships will continue the diet for his exhibition. This the Lords do until the 15th of July next,

Supplication by John Grant of Freuchie that his production of Alaster Grant may be postponed on the ground that the said Alaster is in sickness.

when the Laird of Grant must either produce him or a certificate from the minister of his inability to travel; in which case he must produce him upon the 22d of July, under the penalties contained in the former act.

Complaint by John Ogilvie of Mylnetoun against the Laird of Fendraith whom he accuses of citing him before the Justice in a case which had been decided by the Council.

Complaint by John Ogilvie of Mylnetoun as follows:—The Laird of Fendraith lately cited him before their Lordships for bearing hagbuts and pistols, and hounding out broken Highland men to commit heirships upon his tenants, and when the case came before them on 16th June instant he was convicted of the carrying of firearms and ordained to compone with the Treasurer thereanent (which he has done), but assoilzied from the other part of the complaint. Now, the Laird of Fendraith has cited him before his Majesty's Justice for the same cause on 29th July next, and equity and justice demand that this diet should be deserted, and he and his cautioner freed from their act for compearance that day. Both pursuer and defender compearing, the Laird of Fendraith declared that he had very good reason to pursue the complainer before the Justice, as he had not only reset and intercommuned with those who committed the said heirships, but had also offered to convoy the broken men who came down upon defender's lands. If, however, he would clear himself by his oath of these two points, he would pass from his pursuit before the Justice. The pursuer, being sworn, deponed his innocency in these things, whereupon the defender declared that he passed from the said pursuit before the Justice.

Fol. 219, b.

Complaint by Patrick Murray against the Laird of Fendraith who is citing him before the Council and a Justice-Court on the same charge.

Complaint by Patrick Murrey, son of the deceased William Murrey of Cowbardie, as follows:—He was summoned by the Laird of Fendraith to answer before their Lordships on 16th instant on a charge of taking part in certain heirships committed on Fendraith's estate, and he came to Edinburgh for that purpose, "bot fell sicke upon the day of his compeirance and kept his lodging that day." He is now ready to answer the complaint, but Fendraith has summoned him for the same cause before the Justice on 29th July next; and justice and equity crave that if he clear himself before their Lordships the criminal diet before the Justice should desert. Charge having been given to the said Laird of Fendraith, as defender, and he and the pursuer both compearing, Fendraith passed from this pursuit both before their Lordships and the Justice, whereupon the pursuer asked instruments. But the Lords ordain both parties to find law-surety each to other, Fendraith in 1000 merks and Patrick Murrey in 500 merks.

Complaint by William Steill, one of the soldiers of the company of Colonel Alexander Hamilton, as follows:—In April last he enrolled himself in the said company, received earnest thereupon, and his daily wages since as one of the said Colonel's soldiers; nevertheless Archibald Fisher, merchant burgess of Edinburgh, and several other soldiers in the company of Captain Cochrane, in May last "most craftilie and circumventiouslie drew the compleaner in to the hous of the said Archibald under pretence to drinke with him as a fellow souldiour, and after severall drinkings to make him drunke the said Archibald would have him to take arles as a souldiour under the said Captane Cochrane and wold force him to receive ane kardikew,¹ the quhilk he in respect of his prior condition, refused to embrace." The said Archibald thereupon gave false information to the bailies of Edinburgh, and had him warded in the tolbooth of Edinburgh, where he has since remained. Charge having been given to the said Archibald Fisher, and to Gilbert Achesoun, one of the bailies of Edinburgh, to produce the prisoner, and both pursuer and defender compearing and having been heard, and the pursuer having sworn that about the 11th of April last he received arles from John Sinclare, by whom he "wes tane on" for the service of the said Colonel Hamilton, which the said John Sinclare, being also present, verified by his oath, the Lords ordain and command the provost and bailies of Edinburgh "to delyver the said Williame Steill at full libertie out of thair tolbuith to Johne Sinclare."

Complaint by William Oliphant, servitor to Thomas M^cAulay, Writer to the Signet, and son to Harry Oliphant, also Writer, burges of Edinburgh, as follows:—William Murrey, tenant to Nicol Udward, one of the bailies of Edinburgh, alleging that the complainer was due him a sum of money (of which in terms of the bond payment is not due till Whitsunday 1632), dealt with the said bailie, his master, to commit the complainer to prison until he found caution as law would. The said bailie, “misregarding that the compleaner wes ane burges sonne and that he hes beene resident within the said toun frome his birth, and lyke-ways misregarding that he wes servant to ane member of the Colledge of Justice, and that the day and terme of payment wer not come, did caus his officiers in publict upon the hie streit seaze upon him in disgracefull maner upon the fyftene day of Junij instant, and committ him to waird within thair tolbuith,” where he remained for six days, until the 21st, when he was forced to find caution. He has thus by this unusual procedure been “prejudged by and attour the losse of his charges of the benefite of his service, being ane young man living upon his handie labours in his maisters service, and so exposed to follow some other course.” Charge having been given to the said William Murrey and the said bailie, and to the former to produce the said bond, and pursuer and defenders compearing, it was affirmed by the latter that the money was payable at Whitsunday 1631, but that the said William Oliphant had “vitiat” the bond by changing 1631 into 1632, and having failed in payment at the appointed term and “being resolved to have left the toun and being upon his flight” the said bailie caused commit him until he found caution. The said William Oliphant being strictly examined, affirmed that the said bond “come never in his hands since it was subscryved,” but was continually in the possession of the said William Murrey, and Murrey and certain witnesses produced by him failing to substantiate the charge of vitiating the bond, although they proved that the term of payment was Whitsunday 1631, the Lords assoilzie the pursuer from this accusation, and remit to Murrey to seek payment of his bond in a lawful way before the ordinary judge. The Lords further find that the said Nicol Udward has done wrong in committing the pursuer to ward, “he being servant to ane ordinarie Writer to our soverane lords Signet and ane of the members of the Colledge of Justice, having his sattled residence and dwelling within the burgh of Edinburgh, and his leaving of the toun not being provin,” and ordain him to pay the pursuer 10 merks for his expenses in ward; and they admonish the said bailie and the rest of the baillies of Edinburgh to forbear the like in time coming.

Complaint by Thomas Lamb, messenger, as follows:—Sir James Balfoure, knight, Lyon King of Arms, alleging that he has obtained a decret before their Lordships decerning him to pay to the said Lyon a yearly annuity of £6, and to observe certain injunctions, has caused charge the complainer to give him a bond for payment and observance thereof under pain of horning, and he intends to enforce the said horning. Now, he does so unjustly, because the complainer having produced his blazon and other warrants of his office before the said Lyon in a court held by him in July last, he was forced to give him the bond for which he is now charged before the Lyon would deliver his blazon and warrants foresaid, and this bond the Lyon has now in his possession. The complainers compearing by Samuel Tailfeir, their son, but the defenders not compearing, the Lords ordain letters to be issued charging the Sheriff of Lanerk and his deputes to search for, apprehend and ward the defenders, and to seize their houses and goods within three days after the charge, upon pain of rebellion.

Complaint by Sir Thomas Hope of Craighall, King's Advocate, and Mr. William Murray in Ardowne, as follows:—In contravention of the laws forbidding the wearing of hagbuts and pistols, Sir George Gordoun of Geicht on Sunday 19th June last, came armed with swords and pistols to the complainer's parish kirk of Monfutte and waited there for him until the preaching was ended. "After sermoun, the compleaner being gone to dinner in the dwelling hous of Jerome Lindsey in Monfutte, the said Laird of Geicht sent for him desyring him to come and speeke with him, quhilk the compleaner having obeyed he first entered in ane faire and pleasant discourse with him about certane purposes untill he had drawne him farre out of the toun to the feilds frome the sight of all people, and than he began to forge certane querrells aganis the compleaner, and er ever he wes awar the said Laird drew his sword, strake out a nomber of straiques at the compleaner, and had not failed to have slaine him, wer not his awne better defence." The pursuer compearing but the defender not, the Lords heard evidence of witnesses with reference to that part of the complaint accusing the Laird of Geicht of wearing unlawful weapons and find it proved that he carried pistols on the occasion libelled, wherefore they ordain him to be charged to enter into ward in the tolbooth of Edinburgh and there remain until he compeone with his Majesty's Treasurer for the same, within ten days after the charge; and if he disobey, to denounce and escheat.

Berwick, for imposing a fine on the complainer for an offence for which he had already made compensation.

Sheriff of Berwick and his deutes have summoned him before them and convicted him of "twa bloodweits"; and for payment of the fine imposed by them therefor, have seized five cows with their followers, and a horse worth 100 merks belonging to the complainer. Charge having been given to Sir John Home of Blacader, as sheriff principal of Berwick, and Robert Cockeburne of Blacksmylne, as sheriff depute, and they and the pursuer compearing personally, the defenders explained that they had poinded the goods foresaid for payment of the sheriff's fees in connection with the case of William Trotter. The Lords, after hearing parties, sustain the procedure of the defenders, but exoner the pursuer of the fine of 100 merks which they ordained him to pay to his Majesty.

Supplication by Alexander Gordoun of Carnebarrow that the date for his leaving the country on account of his religion may be postponed.

Supplication by Alexander Gordoun of Carnebarrow, as follows:—He came under caution in the books of Privy Council either to conform to the religion presently professed, or leave the country before 15th September last. He was fully resolved to adopt the latter alternative; but in the meantime it pleased God to visit his aged father with sickness, and "the dewteis of nature and conscience" obliged him to remain in attendance upon his father until , when it pleased God to call him to his mercy. He craves that in the circumstances their Lordships would appoint him another day, by which time he may be able to determine his line of conduct. The Lords assign to him the term of Martinmas next, Robert Gordoun of Garloche becoming cautioner for him that by that time he will either conform to the true religion or leave the country, under the penalty of £500; as also that he will pay the sum of £500 already incurred by him to his Majesty's Treasurer, and compone for his escheat; and, further, that meanwhile he will not reset jesuits and priests, and will admit and hear conference and resort to church; otherwise their Lordships, on learning from the Bishop of Murrey of his disobedience, will recall this warrant, and proceed against him with all rigour and severity.

and, moreover, the amounts are far beyond what the laws prescribe, the said Mr. George Roull being in no better condition than a yeoman, who is only required to find caution in 100 merks, and the said George Moffat being but a poor servant, whose caution should not exceed £40.

However, to eschew the danger of horning they have found caution as charged, and they crave that the charge be suspended. Charge having been given to the said Sir James Douglas, Alexander Torrie, and Alexander Lawder, who appear by Mr. Laurence Oliphant, their procurator, and the pursuers being personally present, the Lords, after hearing parties, suspend the letters of horning as craved and modify the caution to be found by the pursuers to the sum of £100 in the case of Mr. George Roule, and £40 in the case of George Moffat.

against Sir James Balfour of Kynnaire, Lyoun King of Armes, and¹ his clerk and brother heralds, for discharging his exacting from them an unjustly exacting from them an annual fee of £6 or 10 merks, rectifying certain other abuses used of £8. towards them, and reducing the bands which he has taken from them for payment of this annual fee and holding two head courts peremptorily every year. These bands, they allege, were only obtained from them by circumvention, the said Lyoun having convened the complainers to a court the morning after his inauguration to produce the warrants of their offices, which, when they had done, he caused his clerk keep until they subscribed these bands. The said Lyoun has now caused Thomas Lamb, messenger, to be charged to fulfil a decret obtained against him before their Lordships for giving him a band for the said annual fee, and the said Thomas Lamb has suspended the charge, but the Lyoun intends, if the suspension is discussed in his favour, to oppose the same before the Lords of Session. Now, the complainers were never cited to the giving of the said decret, for if they had been, they had their defences ready, as, viz., that several of the complainers were not bound in their former bands to pay any such annual fee to the late Lyoun, and if they were in use of paying it, which they never were, it was voluntary "for a benefite to the compleaners themselfes for receaving thair offices quhilks they have ad vitam vel ad culpam titulo oneroso." And if the Lyoun may impose this yearly fee upon them he may as justly demand payment anew of the £100 or 100 merks which they paid at the time of their admission. Parties being cited, and a number of the foresaid messengers appearing and also the said Sir James Balfour, the Lords, after hearing them, find that their decret in the case of Thomas Lamb shall in no wise militate against the pursuers nor be extended against them nor the rest of the messengers who were not called to the pronouncing thereof, and that Sir James shall be heard to oppose the same against them, but that they and the rest of the messengers may propose their lawful defences against it.

And albeit his Majestie hes beene pleased to erect the place of secund Secretarie (whilk wes never in Scotland of before bot the place of Secretarie in caise of his absence wes supplied be a depute as is constant be the Acts of Parliament and Counsell), yitt it is not his Majesteis pleasure thairby to prejudge the others officers in thair priviledges quhilks they have and enjoy by Acts of Parliament and Counsell anteriour to the said erectioun. Lykeas in the patent givin to the said Sir Archibald of the office of Secretarie there is speciall reservatioun to the Lord Viscount of Stirline, principall Secretarie, of all the honnours and digniteis of the place during his lyfetyme.  to the principall Secretar. Unto the quhilks alledgeances the said
 Sir Archibald oppouned the custome of all his Majesteis dominions and of all other forrane nations, and he produced his patent and gift of his place under the great seale as his Majesteis Secretarie of Estait of his kingdome of Scotland without additioun of the word secund, and bearing all honours and precedences enjoyed be anie of his predecessours and cled with ane uninterrupted possession of precedencie and ranking in all former commissiouns, letters, proclamations, decreits and sederunts of rankings of Parliament, Counsell, Sessioun and Exchequer; and also desired the said Act of Counsell and declaratioun of Parliament to be produced as evidences to demonstrat his precedencie before the Advocat, conforme to the custome of all nations; and so being his Majesteis Secretarie he is ane officiar of estait als principall as Sir Johne Cooke in England or the Lord Montnores in Ireland; and there wes never anie suche designatioun in Scotland as that of secund Secretarie nather is there anie mentioun of principall Secretarie in the said Act of Counsell made in anno 1623 nor Act of Parliament made in anno 1617 but onlie of Secretarie; and his Majestie in all his letters and commissions, and the Lords of Privie Counsell in all thair letters and commissions writteth ever the said Sir Archibald his Majesteis Secretarie, without additioun of Secund. And where it is alledgit that the said Sir Archibald is no officiar of estait nor hes no vote in Parliament nor Articles except his Majestie use his service thairin in absence of the Lord Viscount of Stirlie or some other officiar of estait, yitt he hopeth no wise man can say bot ane Secretar of estait and kingdome is ane officiar of estait and of more eminent trust and neere-nesse to his Majestie than the Advocat; lykeas the remanent officers of estait, viz., the Clerk of Register, Justice Clerk and Maister of Requeists never as yitt did nor now doeth anie wayes questioun the Secretarie his precedence or ranking before thame. And as concerning the Act of Counsell made in anno 1623 it is answered the same wes onlie made for ranking of the counsellors in the counselhouse and no Fol. 75, a.
 where ellis, and there wes than onlie one Secretar in the kingdome who be imagined that ane Secretar of Estait who writteth letters and pacquets for the Estait to the King and frome the King to the Estait and frome both to forrane kings and estaits can be excluded frome being ane officiar of estait, bot that in absence of one Secretar his Majestie may use the other even in Parliament; or that in absence of umquhill Sir Williame Oliphant his Majestie might not have used the said Sir Thomas Hope, his Majesteis other Advocat, or that now if the said Sir Thomas wer visite with sicknesse or had another Advocat joyned with him, bot that his Majestie might use that other Advocat in Parliament or elliswhere as ane officiar of estait in absence of the other for his Majesteis service. And forder it is alledgit that in the said Act of Counsell the Viscounts ar ranked after the Erles and before the Bishops, after whome ar the temporall lord barons and after thame the officiaris of estait amongs whome the Secretar is ranked before the Advocat, and the Lord Viscount of Stirlie cannot be accounted that man who is to be ranked after the lord barons, he being a Viscount, bot it is some other Secretarie who is to be ranked, viz. Sir Archibald Achesone who in his gift is styled Secretarie pure et simpliciter without additioun of the word Secund, and unto whome by the said gift ar grantit all honnours, digniteis and precedenceis formerlie enjoyed by anie of his predecessours. And whereas it wes alledgit be the said Advocat that in the Act of Parliament made in anno 1617 there wes ane reducement of all officiaris of estait to the number of eight, it is answered that there is no suche Act yitt made nor published. It is trew that in the said Parliament, 1617, when some of the nobilitie spake aganis the voting of officiaris of estait, after searche of the registers it wes reported to the King and Parliament be the than Clerk of Register, who is now Lord Chancellor, that sometymes the officiaris of estait who voted in Parliament wer abone eight and sometymes fewer than eight, and that thairfoir his Majestie than declared that no more officiaris of estait than aucht sould have vote in Parliament nor articles as officiaris of Estait; lykeas be that declaratioun the King is not limited frome having more nor eight or frome using what eight he pleases, bot be the contrare the said declaratioun doeth cleerelie demonstrat that the King at that tyme both had, and by joyning, divisioun or otherwayes may have as he now hes more then eight officiaris of estait togidder, and that it is in his pleasure and optioun what eight to use in Parliament without being addicted to anie one more nor another conforme to the wounted custome of Parliaments. Lykeas his Majestie did formerlie in manie preceeding Parliaments use the Chancellor, Comptroller and Collectour as officiaris of estait notwithstanding of the remanent eight, viz., Thesaurar, Privie Seale, Thesaurar Depute, Secretar, Clerk Register, and it is high presumptioun to alledge the contrair. For by the sederunts of Parliament it may appeare that the lait King made the Lord Chancellor, being a nobleman, to sitt among the noblemen, and made umquhill Sir Gedeon Murray, Thesaurar Depute, to vote in his place; and yitt he did not

debarre the Chancellor from being ane officiar of estait. Lykeas he did ^{Acta January 1631. May 1632. Fol. 75, b.} in the than nixt following Parliament, 1621, sitt and vote amongs the officers of estait, and in that sederunt was ranked among thame. And forder, it is alledgit that in all the sederunts of all preceeding Parliaments, Counsell and Sessioun the Advocat is still ranked after the Secretarie, and that also in all former commissions, proclamations, decreits, letters and writtings whatsomever the Secretar, and namlie the said Sir Archibald Achesone, is still ranked before the Advocat; and thairfoir in law, custome, reasoun and honnour the Advocat aucht to be debarred from his clame of precedence before anie Secretar whatsomever. To the whilk it was replied be his Majesteis Advocat that the allegatiouns made aganis the Act of Parliament and Secreit Counsell ar disconforme frome the saids Acts and that both the Clerk Register and Advocat concures for maintenance of thair places; and for the custome of England and Ireland it aucht not to be respected becaus there the Clerk of Register and Advocat hes not vote in Parliament as they have in Scotland. To the quhilk it wes duplyed be the said Sir Archibald that his alledgeances ar relevant and no wayes disconforme to the words and meaning of the said Act of Counsell and declaratioun in Parliament and that the Advocat aucht not have the said precedence no more nor the Kings Attorney of England or Ireland nor of anie other natioun hes before ane Secretar of Estait of anie of the saids kingdomes. brother, ordaining the baillies of Selkirk to liberate him from their tolbooth in so far as he was warded at the instance of his said brother or his cedents upon enacting himself in the town books of Selkirk to compear before their Lordships on 12th July instant under a penalty of 1000 merks. He expected that on so doing he would obtain his liberty, but he is still detained in ward by the procurement of his said brother at the instance of Mr. John Ker and Agnes Lawsoun, his spouse, Andrew Scot in Howden, George Curroure of Quhytumrehall, George Turnebull in Philiphauche, Alexander Andersoun in Schaw, George Riddell in Selkirk, James Winrame of Libbertoun, James Murrey in Selkirk and Mr. Robert Craig, factors to Francis Stewart, son of the late Earl of Bothwell, John Lidderdail in Selkirk, Mr. Patrick Schaw, minister there, John Short and John Andersoun, burgesses of Edinburgh, Alexander Wright, burgesse there, and Henry Wright in Selkirk, whose whole debts do not exceed 1000 merks, and all of whome except one to whome the complainer owes but £100 would willingly consent to the complainer's liberation, knowing that if he were in a position in which he could dispose of his lands he would soon give them satisfaction, whereas his lying in prison not only hinders them, but wrecks the complainer himself, his wife and eleven poor children. payment of this aliment so angers her said husband that he employs all means, direct and indirect, to have it discharged. With this object, and not out of anie affection or love he has to the complainer or desire of her company, he has now raised an action of adherence before the Commissaries of Edinburgh, who also intend to proceed with and adjudicate in the case. She pleads that they cannot do so, seeing that the matter is one with which their Lordships have dealt, and with whom the final dealing of the case must therefore remain. If she goes home to her said husband she has nothing to look for but "all the malice and wrath whairwith he may afflict her," as his hatred to her is more violent than ever. She pleads therefore that the Commissaries should be discharged of interfering in the case. Charge having been given to the said Patrick Cranstoun, and also to the Commissaries of Edinburgh and their clerk, and all parties compeiring, the Lords find that the proposed action is proper and competent to be dealt with by the Commissaries of Edinburgh, and remit the same to them to proceed therewith according to the law; ordaining them, moreover, to provide for the indemnity of the pursuer, and her honest aliment and entertainment as is usual in matters of that kind.

of Rothiemay.

In the cause between Katharine Forbes, Lady Rothiemay, and John Gordoun of Innermerkie (ante, p. 242), the said John Gordoun compeared and exhibited his pupil, James Gordoun, now of Rothiemay, before the Council, and the said Lady Rothiemay being likewise personally present, the Lords heard what either party had to say regarding the custody of the said pupil. After advising, their Lordships find "that the tuitioun and charge of the pupills persoun and the administratioun of his estait belongs to the said Johne Gordoun in the right of his office; and yitt notwithstanding for the better educatioun of the said pupill in religioun and letters the saids Lords ordains him to be bred and educat at the schooles of Aberdein during his minoritie and to be placed in some honest hous there attended with ane pedagogue at the sight and appointment of the Bishop of Aberdein," and they ordain that his mother, with her own consent, shall bear the expense of his maintenance there until it be seen if he has sufficient means of his own, and if he has, she is to receive repayment of her expenses from the said John Gordoun, tutor. Further, the Lords ordain the said John Gordoun to place his pupil in the charge of the Bishop of Aberdein within the burgh of Aberdein on 6th August next; and if the said John returns home before that time and before the said Bishop's departure from Edinburgh, he is to leave his pupil with the Bishop of Dumblane, in whose company he is to remain, and thereafter he is to be taken to Aberdein by his mother and placed in the Bishop's custody on the day foresaid. To do this both the said John Gordoun and Lady Rothiemay, whichever of them took charge of the matter, enacted themselves under a penalty of £500. Further, the Lords ordain that at the expiring of his minority the pupil is to appear before the Lords of Session, that, with the advice of his friends on both the father's and mother's side, he may choose his curators. Meantime, while the boy remains in this town, he is to be in the keeping of his said tutor, he allowing him always to go to his mother at such times as he shall be required. And, finally, the Lords ordain that this arrangement shall be without prejudice to the rights of the office of tutory belonging to the said John Gordoun of Innermerkie.

mission with the said Sir John's estate, and for denuding him of the said estate. Several of their Lordships have personally taken great trouble in the matter; but the said Andrew, unwilling to relinquish, has now raised an action before the Lords of Session for declaring that the said
Sir John's lands belong to him, and when anyone appears in the said
Sir John's behalf to except, the said Andrew debar them by horning against the said Sir John. The complainers are thus "heavilie pre-them, and at the desire of Henry Lethingtoun, "coupper" in the Cannogait, he entered into terms with certain craftsmen there, who turned out very ignorant and unskilful, and utterly spoiled his work. Accordingly, he was forced to employ others, and among these one Abraham Anderson, "sklaitter," burges of Edinburgh, a competent craftsman, to put on roofs, and the said Abraham was engaged in this work when, on July instant, James Aittoun, bailie in the Cannogait, and the said Henry Lethingtoun, came and violently carried off the said Abraham to their tolbooth, where they have kept him imprisoned for twelve days, and refuse to release him until he enact himself to desist from all working they ar employed and contrarie to the freedome of all his Majesteis good subjects in thair choice of craftsmen where they may have thame most sufficient." The complainer has thereby been "greatlie damnified and his worke cast farre abacke." Charge having been given to the persons accused to appear and produce Abraham Anderson, and they all and the pursuer compearing and having been heard, the Lords ordain the said James Aittoun to liberate the said Abraham that he may complete his work, and discharge the said Henry Lethington of all troubling of him therein; but they declare that if after trial and consideration of the liberties and rights claimed by the craftsmen of the Cannogait, in terms Complaint by Robert Monteith, indweller in Edinburgh, against Susanna Heriot, widow of John Mowat, burgess of Edinburgh, for illegal action in connection with an act of caution by which the complainer had become bound.

Complaint by Robert Monteith, indweller in Edinburgh, as follows:—
He became cautioner for Alexander Monteith, servitor to Lord Balmerinloch, that he would exhibit David Littill of Ormestounhill before their Lordships on 27th April last to answer a complaint by Susanna Heriot, widow of John Mowat, burgess of Edinburgh, and failing herein, that he would pay to her at Whitsunday last the sums of money for which she had the said David at the horn. Now, the 27th of April not being an ordinary Council day, nothing followed upon the said act. Charge having been given to the said Susanna Heriot, and the pursuer appearing and producing the said David Littill, who exhibited a note of the appraised value of certain of his clothes which were in the keeping of the said Susanna extending to £96 6s.; and the defender not compearing, the Lords ordain that the said clothes in her possession belonging to the said David shall stand as full payment of the debt he owes her.

Complaint by Michael Scot in Leslie against John Aitken, elder, in Rescobie, for assault.

Complaint by Michael Scot in Leslie, as follows:—
On 9th July instant Johne Aitkine, elder, in Rescobie, lay in wait for him at the town of Dunfermeline and meeting him on his way to the Quenisferrie, assaulted him from behind with a great sting, gave him a number of wounds on the head and felled him to the ground, to the great effusion of his blood and peril of his life, besides giving him many "bauch, blae and bloodie straiikes" in divers parts of his body. The pursuer appearing but not the defender, the Lords, after hearing the pursuer and his witnesses, find that the defender "hurt and woundit the said persewer with ane stalffe to the effusioun of his blood," and ordain him to be charged to enter into ward in the tolbooth of Edinburgh within six days and there remain until order be taken with him for this insolence and failing to do so he is to be put to the horn and escheat.

Complaint by John, Earle of Annandale, against John Johnstoun of Stodrighs and others for refusing the mart cows due to him as custodian of the Castle of Lochmaben.

Complaint by John, Earle of Annerdaill, and Sir Thomas Hope of Craighall, Lord Advocate, for his Majesty's interest, as follows:—The said Earl is heritably infeft in the constabulary and keeping of the Castle of Lochmaben “with threttie twa mart ky to be uplifted furth of the threttie twa parishes of the Stewartrie of Annerdaill.” His right is derived from George, Earl of Dumbar, who was first infeft therein, and who, with the keepers of the said castle, before the date of the said infeftment have been in continual use, past memory of man, of uplifting “ane mairt and kow furth of everie ane of the saids threttie twa parishes out of the readiest of thair ky and oxin, for the quhilk kow takin out of the saids parishes the hail rest of the heretours within the parish contributed with the person whois kow wes takin for his releefe according to the extent of the lands lying within the parish.” Accordingly, on 16th December, 1630, the Earl's servants, Matthew Wilsoun, elder and younger, went to the parish of Corrie and took a “mairt kow” there, whereupon John Johnstoun, younger of Stodrighs, and William Grahame, son of James Grahame of Stobhill, armed with “stalffes and swords,” set upon them and took the mart from them; the same day Williame Grahame, in Hiechat, and Simon and John Grahame, his sons, and others, armed with swords and other forbidden weapons, violently debarred the said Earl's servants from uplifting the said mart out of the parish of Huttoun; likewise that same day John Lintoun, Thomas Porteous, Thomas Bell, and John Sandert assembled themselves together “with shout and cry,” and forcibly debarred them from taking the mart from the parish of Apilgirth, and Patrick Proudfoete in Miltoun, armed with forbidden weapons, violently prevented them from uplifting the mart from the parish of Kirkpatrick; further, when, that same day, the said Earl's servants had taken the mart from the parish of Sibbalbie, Alexander Boyes in Bekcothill, and others, armed with forbidden weapons, pursued them for a mile, and took the mart from them: Moreover, on the 17th of the said month, James Achesoun, called the Choppin, James Achesoun in Polmudie, Matthew Johnestoun there, William and John Blaikok, there, servants to Herbert Achesoun in Polmudie, at the direction of the said Herbert, violently debarred them from uplifting the mart from the parish of Moffat; and Thomas Dinwiddie in Achindinnen, violently debarred them from uplifting it from the parish of Johnestoun. The complainer is thus like to be deprived of the duties pertaining to the said office. Charge having been given to the persons complained against, and the Lord Advocate compeiring personally, the Earl of Annerdail by Mr. Alexander Burnet, his procurator, the said Simon Grahame, Herbert Achesoun, Thomas Dinwiddie, John Johnestoun of Stodrigs, William Grahame in Cartertoun, William Grahame in Heichat, John Grahame, his son, James Achesoun in Polmudie, Matthew Johnestoun there, and William and John Blaiklocks thare, compeiring by James Johnestoun of that Ilk, who said he would answer for them, and the said Patrick Proudfoote by Mr. Samuel Johnestoun, who declared he would be responsible for him, and parties and their witnesses having been heard, the Lords find the complaint proved, and ordain the said James Johnestoun of that Ilk and Samuel Johnestoun to enact themselves that the persons whom they represent shall make restitution of the marts, and forbear all opposition in future, under such penalties as the Lords may see fit to impose in case of contravention. Further, as nothing was proved against the said Herbert Achesoun, the Lords assoilzie him; and they ordain the said John Lintoun, Thomas Porteous, Thomas Bell, John Sandert, Alexander Boyes, and James Achesoun, called the Choppin, who failed to appear, to be charged to enter themselves within six days in ward in the tolbooth of Edinburgh, and there await their punishment, under the pain of rebellion.

Complaint by Isobel Dowglas, widow of Archibald Weddell of Turindykes, Mr. William Weddell, her son, and James Simsoun, her tennant, as follows:—The said Mr. William Weddell is heritable possessor of the lands of Turindykes and their pertinents and he and his predecessors have been in peaceable possession thereof and of the commonty of the Muir of Crichtoun by pasturing their cattle and winning thair fuel there past memory of man, without opposition or interruption, until that lately, after the death of the said Archibald Weddell, Adam Wauchop of Caikmure, and Michael Scot, the Earl of Buccleuch's chamberlain of the lordship of Crichtoun, taking advantage of the simplicity of the said widow and her son, resolved by way of "deid, bangsterie and oppressioun to debarre and seclude the compleaner and thair said tennent frome their privilege of pastouring thair goods and winning of fewell upon the said mure," and consequently from their possession of the said lands, which cannot be laboured without the benefit of the said muir. Accordingly, on 1st July instant, the said Adam Wauchop and Michael Scot directed James Cockeburne in Crichtoun, Michael Dewar and John Paistoun there, to the said muir, where the said James Simsoun had loaded a horse and cart with fuel, as he had been wont to do for the twelve years of his tenancy without interruption, and as he was coming home, near the town of Crichtoun they "violently reft the hors and cairt out of his hand, kuist the same over ane steepe craig or sinke beside the said toun and had almost brokin the said tennants craig and his horse backe, so as the poore beast is become so lamed and crooked that he will never be usefull for anie service." So, also, the complainer is despoiled of his fuel, and his assailants would have killed him if some neighbours had not come to his relief, at which they, grudging, threatened to take his life if ever he came there again. By this oppression, committed so near to the seat of justice, the complainer's lands are like to be laid waste if remedy be not provided. Charge having been given to all the parties complained upon, and both pursuers and defenders compearing personally, the latter alleged that they did nothing but make a civil and legal interruption against the intrusion of the pursuers upon the Muir of Crichtoun. The Lords, after hearing parties, ordain the pursuers, in respect of their present possession of the muir, to continue therein till they be orderly removed by course of law, and admit the alleged interruption as a sufficient ground upon which the defenders may proceed against the pursuers to this end.

Complaint by Agnes Arnot against Laurence Thompson, her husband, for theft of money which the complainer had earned by the making of starch.

Complaint by Hew Tod, Writer to the Signet, and Agnes Ernot, wife of Laurence Thomesoun in Leith, as follows:—There was a contract made in 1630 between the said Laurence Thomesoun and his said spouse and the said Hew Tod whereby Thomesoun and his wife obliged themselves to procure a gift under the Privy Seal of "the making of stifing" within the realm in their own favour, and by the same deed they, as if the gift had been already procured, granted a lease to the said Hew Tod of the sole right of making the said "stifing" during the lifetime of the said Agnes Arnot for payment of the yearly duty therein specified, his entry to be at the date of the said contract. In terms of this deed the said Agnes Arnot in name of Hew Tod has since possessed "the said office of stifing making be buying of wheat, making of the said stifing, selling thairof, and uplifting of the moneyes thairfoir fra merchants, buyers of the same stifing," for a year; but the said Laurence Thomesoun, understanding that the said Agnes Arnot had received certain money for paying of her creditors, from whom she had borrowed for buying wheat, "in his wounted maner come to the said Agnes her almerie within her said dwelling hous" and violently, on 19th July instant, under silence of night took the sum of 3000 merks; and, further, broke up her workhouses and took away "stiffing" and wheat of the value of other 3000 merks. He also struck the said Agnes, giving her "manie bloodie and blaë straike," put her out of her dwelling-house, and will neither allow her to enter nor give her her clothes. Both pursuers and defender compearing, the latter admitted that he took from his wife sixty two dollars and two pieces of gold for payment of some of his debts, which, with the evidence of some witnesses, having been heard and considered, the Lords ordain the defender to restore to his wife the money he had taken from her "dresser almerie," and the keys of her work house, so that she may pursue her trade of stiffing making at her pleasure, under tolerance of the said Hew Tod and in terms of the contract, and they reserve right to the pursuers to sue the defender for recovery of the rest of the money. They further ordain the defender to find caution in 500 merks for the indemnity of his wife; and she is to find caution in the books of Secret Council to relieve her said husband of all debts which she may contract in connection with her stiffing works.

Complaint by James Wallace, David Quhytheid, John Nisbitt, elder and younger, James Tait, elder and younger, William Tait, Robert Gray, George Johnestoun, William Litster, and John Henrie, for themselves, and in name of the remanent tenants of Colbrandspeth, as follows:—
Complaint by James Wallace and others against James and John Angus of Foulfordleyes for stopping a common way between the town of Duns and the sea.
 There is a common highway leading from the sea to the town of Dunce and other parts of the Merce, which passes between Colbrandspeth and the muir and moss thereof. By this way the complainers and their predecessors have always been accustomed to pass to diverse parts in the Merce, and also to and from the muir and moss of Colbrandspeth with horses and carts for winning of peats and fuel, and their privilege was never quarrelled nor interrupted until that, lately, James and John Angus of Foulfordleyes have "putt in certane great stones in the said hieway whairby he hes stopped all passage to his Majesteis lieges be hors or cart by that way." The complainers dealt with him for removing the stones, but he utterly refuses, and has occasioned twenty-four carts with their horses to stand idle from 8th to 11th July instant, to the great damage of the complainers and the disappointing them of their winter's fuel. Parties compearing personally, the defenders replied to the complaint "that the halfe of the hie way being tane away be the force and violence of the waters and they fearing that for supplee thair of the saids persewars sould encroache upon thair heritage they to secure the same patt in stones in thair awne heritage whilk wes never anie hie way." The Lords, after hearing parties, appoint Sir James Baillie of Lochend, Mr. James Sydserfe of Ruchla, and James Happer of Bourehouses to visit the ground in dispute, find out what was the old way, how much of it was taken away, and how it might best be enlarged, and report to the Lords on 21st September next; and meanwhile they ordain the Counter-complaint by James Angus of Foulfordleyes against John Arnot in Pathhead and others for damaging his lands and for assault.

Complaint by James Angus of Foulfordleyes, as follows :—He and his predecessors have been in peaceable possession of the lands of Foulfordleyes and their pertinents without trouble or interruption past memory of man until lately that Mr. James Nicolsoun of Colbrandspeth, by himself and others, has caused make roads and highways through the complainer's proper lands, and driven horses and carts through the same. When the complainer set in some stones to prevent people coming off the highway upon his lands and took instruments against the said Mr. James and his tenants for doing so, yet, upon July instant, John Arnot in Pethheid, William Arnot, his son, Robert Pannango in Colbrandspeth Tower, James Broun, Patrick Tennent, Walter Bissat and James Bissat, his son, Patrick Maislet, John Chrystesoun, Andrew Sandersoun, James Wallace, and Robert Hunter, all at the instigation of the said Mr. James, came to the complainer's said lands armed with "swords, stings and long weapons, and having hors and carts in their companie they drave the same alongs ane great part of one of the compleaners rigs and there pulled up the stones sett in be him, as said is, and kuist thame away, delved up his proper ground; and the compleaner being accidentallie upon the feilds and having come to the saids persons, he being solitarie and without weapouns, after that he had modestlie reprehendit thame for this lawlesse oppressioun he departed. Bot how soone they perceaved him to be gone backe they followed after him and cruellie persewed him of his lyfe with great kents whairwith they gave him ane number of straiques in diverse parts of his bodie, strake him to the ground, verie cruellie birsed and bruised him, tramped and tred upon him with thair feit, drew thair whingers and strake out diverse straiques at him thairwith, hurt and woundit him upon the bellie and hand to the effusioun of his blood and perrell of his lyfe, and had not failed to have slane him if his sonne had not come for his releefe." Parties being cited and the pursuers compearing personally, and of the defenders the said Mr. James Nicolsoun, John and William Arnot, Robert Pannango, James Bissat, and James Wallace, probation was referred to the oath of verity of the defenders present, who being sworn denied the truth of the complaint except that John Arnot confessed that in his own necessary defence "he kuist the persewer doun and tooke his whinger frome him." The Lords accordingly assoilzie the defenders.

Complaint by Robert Buchan, burgess of Aberdeen, against George Rowan, merchant in Dundee, and others for fishing for pearls to the prejudice of the commission of the complainer.

Complaint by Robert Buchan, burgess of Aberdein, as follows:—His Majesty and their Lordships were pleased to appoint him commissioner for “fishing and seeking of pearle,” within the whole waters of Aberdeenshire and bounds of Sutherland, Ros, and Strathnaver, so that none might engage therein but such men of skill as should be appointed by him, and from whom he should receive all pearls found in the months of July and August (which is the proper season for seeking of pearls) upon reasonable prices to be paid by him for them. In the execution of this commission the complainer has been very careful to approve himself worthy of the trust reposed in him by his Majesty, and has duly proclaimed and notified the terms of his commission to all parties, yet George Rowane, merchant in Dundie, John M^cAlaster Moir, merchant, Donald M^cIlle V^cMerkie, merchant; Thomas Vaus, burges of Invernes; Donald M^cUriquhie, merchant in ; Donald Fouller, elder and younger, William Monro, burgess of Tayne; and Robert Cruikschanke, burgess of Aberdein, have frequently contravened the complainer’s commission since it was granted in 1625 by fishing for pearls without his warrant, and selling the same to all persons at their pleasure and to strangers for small advantage, whereby “the broode of the pearle is spoyled,” his Majesty is deprived of the benefit of the same, and the complainer’s commission, in respect of which he has been at great charges, made unprofitable. Charge having been given to these persons, and the complainer appearing by Mr. Robert Petrie, his procurator, and the said Donald Fouller, elder and younger, by their procurator, James Gibsoun, but none of the other defenders, the Lords grant commission to the provost and bailies of Aberdein to meet on the first Tuesday after the 15th of September and take the oaths of the said Donald Fouller, elder and younger, upon their alleged contravention of the said commission and proclamations; and they ordain the remanent defenders to be put to the horn and escheat. Complaint by Michael Carlisle in Cokesfield against the Viscount of Drumlanrig for illegal warding.

Complaint by Michael Carlill in Cokisfield, as follows:—On June last, as the complainer was coming from the park of Dalswinton toward the place of Drumlanrig for doing his lawful business, George Rig, bailie to the Viscount of Drumlanrig, and Mr. George Douglas, his brother, at the direction of the said Viscount, but for what cause he knows not, apprehended him and took and imprisoned him in the place of Drumlanrig, where they have kept him for a month, and refuse all caution for putting him to liberty. Charge having been given to the said Mr. George Douglas and George Rig, the former compeared and produced the complainer, and stated that complaint was made to the said Viscount by Sir John Maxwell of Conhaith that the complainer had stolen some goods from him, and as the complainer dwells in his Fol. 249, b.

bounds, the Viscount, as lord of the regality of Drumlanrig, ordered his apprehension. The complainer replied that he was "ane honest and trew man," and never stole any goods belonging to the said Sir John; and accordingly he offered himself for trial before any impartial judges within the kingdom. The Lords appoint John, Lord Stewart of Tracquir, Robert, Lord Dalzell, and Sir Robert Greir of Lag, commissioners of the Middle Shires, or any two of them, Lord Tracquir being one, to be judges for trying this case in the burgh of Dumfreis on 14th August next, and meanwhile the complainer is to be liberated, he acting himself in 1000 merks, with John Maxwell, burgess of Dumfreis, as his cautioner, that he will then appear and undergo his trial.

Complaint by William Alexander, merchant burgess of Dundee, as follows:—His Majesty was pleased in consideration of the complainer's great losses at the hands of the Dunkirkers, who robbed him of his ship and goods, and so disabled him from paying his creditors, to grant him a protection for a year from the date of the appending of the great seal thereto, which was on 2nd June last, yet the provost and bailies of Dundee at the desire of James Durhame of Pitkerro, Peter Balmanno of Carlungzie, Robert Murrey, Marjory Gleg, and James Cochrane, burgess of Dundie, her spouse, the complainer's creditors, apprehended him and detain him still in ward in thair tolbooth, and part of his debts is a cautionary for Archibald Kid. Charge having been given to these persons, and the pursuer appearing by Mr. John Galloway, his procurator, but of the defenders only James Durhame of Pitkerro, who appeared by Mr. James Durhame, his son, the Lords, after hearing parties, ordain the provost and bailies of Dundie to liberate the pursuer in so far as he is warded at the instance of any of the defenders, he first finding caution to pay what he is due to the said James Durhame before 15th September next or then re-enter to his present ward, where he shall remain, notwithstanding his letters of protection, until he pay the same.

Complaint by Sir Thomas Hope of Craighall, his Majesty's Advocate, and Dame Katharine Cuninghame, Lady Glengarnock, as follows:—
Lady Glengarnock has recovered decree before the Lords of Session against Sir John Buchanan of that Ilk and other possessors of the lands of Bandallache and castle thereof, and certain other lands, and for their removal therefrom she raised letters of horning against them. These letters, however, were suspended upon their offers of obedience and caution. She expected then to have obtained possession of the lands, but the said persons have not removed and will not. She accordingly raised letters to compel the Sheriff of Stirlin to enforce the law, and so John, Earl of Mar, as sheriff, being thus charged, caused Robert Stewart of Culbeg, one of his deputies, to take action. He, on 6th July instant, went to the place of Bandallache for this purpose, but notice having been conveyed to George Buchannan, apparent of that Ilk, he collected a number of his own tenants and of other people, chiefly rebels and soldiers, and arming them with muskets, hagbuts, and other invasive weapons, he placed them in the house of Bandallache, furnished it with provisions and ammunition, and gave these persons strict orders that if any approached the house to force an entrance, they should immediately discharge their muskets and hagbuts at them. They also carried up with them to the wall head a number of great stones to throw down upon those that came near. The said George himself "walked up and down the greene foreanent the yett in contempt of the said shireff depute," who having told him his object in coming and that he behoved to obey, was answered by him disdainfully, that he would keep that place and render it on no condition. The sheriff depute having then ordered "to brasche the yett with forehammers," the said George told him that he would do that at his peril, and called up to his men to cast down the stones upon the sheriff depute and discharge their weapons, meanwhile uttering disgraceful speeches against the sheriff depute, who, being thus violently deforced, gave way. The Lord Advocate appearing personally, and Lady Glengarnock by Mr. William Cunninghame of Broomehill, but not the defender, the Lords after hearing the evidence of witnesses, find that the said George Buchannan deforced the said sheriff depute by crying to his servants to cast down stones upon him, which they accordingly did, and by presenting pistols at him, for which insolence they ordain him to be charged to enter into ward in the tolbooth of Edinburgh within six days upon pain of rebellious; and if he fail to do so to put him to the horn and escheat.

Complaint by George, Earl of Crawford, and others against Thomas Fotheringham, sheriff of Forfar, for not holding his courts at Forfar, which is the head burgh of the shire.

Complaint by George, Earl of Crawford; John, Earl of Kinghorne, James, Lord Ogilvie, and Alexander, Lord Spynie, for themselves and in name of their friends, tenants and servants dwelling within the sheriffdom of Forfar, and by the provosts, bailies, and inhabitants of the burghs of Forfar, Arbrothe, Brechin, and Monrose, as follows:— Throughout the whole kingdom, in all the shires, the sheriff courts are held within the head burgh thereof, and by law the sheriff clerks are required to reside within the said burgh. Now, the burgh of Forfar is the head burgh of the shire of Forfar, "standing almost in the verie heart and middes of the shirefdome," is the most commodious place for holding the sheriff courts, and has in all times and ages bygone possessed the liberties, freedome and privileges proper and due to other head burghs, and these should not now be refused to the complainers; yet Thomas Fotheringhame of Powrie, present Sheriff of Forfar, whose dwelling-house is very near the burgh of Dundie, and whose present dwelling is within that burgh, for his own ease, and the ease of his deputes and clerks, who also reside in the said burgh, has commenced to keep the sheriff-court there, so that the complainers are obliged to travel twenty or thirty miles, by which they are heavily prejudged; and this notwithstanding that their Lordships by their former decree had ordained the said Sheriff to keep his courts at the burgh of Forfar. Parties being cited, and the said Lord Ogilvie and Lord Spynie appearing for themselves and the Earl of Crawford, and their friends, tenants and servants, and Mr. David Persoun, clerk of Forfar, appearing for the rest of the pursuers, the said Sheriff being also present as defender, the Lords find that, according to the universal custom of the kingdom, the sheriff courts of Forfar ought to be held within the burgh of Forfar as the head burgh of the said shire, and they ordain the said Sheriff and his successors in office to keep their courts there in all time coming, without prejudice, however, to the provost, bailies and council of Dundie raising an action of reduction on account of their not being cited to the giving of this decree: and further, notwithstanding of the premises, they allow the defender, during his term of office, to hold his courts within the burgh of Dundie.

The Lords of Privy Council, by warrant from his Majesty, gave directions for making a general collection on behalf of the distressed ministers of the Palatinate throughout all the kirks of the kingdom, and the money uplifted in each parish was to be delivered to the moderator of each presbytery to be by him paid to George Suttie and William Gray, merchants in Edinburgh. Now, the moderators and ministers within the diocese of St. Andrews have greatly neglected their duty in this matter, and have not delivered up the money collected by them, and so disappoint those for whom it was collected. Charge having been given to Mr. Alexander Gledstains, moderator of the presbytery of St. Andrewes; Mr. Thomas Baxter, minister at Denbuge, moderator of the presbytery of Cowper; and Mr. John Malcolme, moderator of the presbytery of Perth, to send in their money as directed, and, if not, to appear this day to answer upon their refusal, and the said ministers neither appearing, nor having sent in their money, as was affirmed by the Bishop of St. Andrewes, who was personally present, the Lords ordain them to be put to the horn and escheat.

Mr. Alexander Gledstains, moderator of the Presbytery of St. Andrews, and others put to the horn and escheat for not delivering the subscriptions raised for the Palatine ministers to the collectors appointed by the Council.

Considering himself very badly used by one who had slain his father, the complainer on last went to the said Adam's dwelling in order to apprehend him and present him to justice, but in resisting apprehension he was unhappily slain. Thereupon the said Earl of Home apprehended the complainer, and bringing him to Edinburgh imprisoned him in the tolbooth, promising to support him there until his trial should take place; but though he has now been in the said ward one month, the complainer has not received any support from the said Earl, and he will not put him to his trial, so that he is like to starve in his place of imprisonment. Charge having been given to the said Earl, who compeared, and the pursuer compearing by James Murrey, younger, of Philiphaugh, the Lords, after hearing parties, ordain the provost and bailies of Edinburgh to liberate the pursuer, who has found caution in 500 merks to appear before the Justice and underly his trial for the said slaughter. on the 29th he imprisoned him of new within the tolbooth and detains him there "as ane theefe or tratour but light or companie." Moreover, daily before his incarceration the said John, Patrick Rid (or Rae), deacon of the bakers there, Thomas, John and Alexander Purves, John and Thomas Adamsoun, Thomas Wilsoun, and Daniel Young sought for him in order to slay him, and they forcibly debar him from working at his said calling. These persons being cited, and the pursuer compearing, being produced by the said bailie, and all the defenders, except Thomas Wilsoun and Daniel Young, also compearing, and having been heard, the Lords ordain the pursuer to be put to liberty, and remit the trial of the dispute between parties to Patrick Dowglas, deacon of the "baksters" of Edinburgh, and James Simsoun, deacon of the bakers of the Cannogait, who are to settle the matter as they shall think expedient.

Supplication by the provost and bailies of Jedburgh, as follows:—Some years ago Robert Ker of Fermingtoun was committed to ward within their tolbooth for a debt of 400 merks, but shortly afterwards made his escape, whereupon his creditors sued them before the Lords of Session, and compelled them to pay this sum. The said Robert is now once more imprisoned in their tolbooth for a debt of over 8000 merks, and as they are informed he means to make another effort to escape, in which, if he succeed, he will undo their town by their being compelled to pay this other debt, they are forced to maintain a watch both day and night. They therefore crave permission to bring him into Edinburgh, and deliver him prisoner to the keeper of the tolbooth there, with a note of the arrestments made upon him in their ward of Jedburgh, that he may remain there upon his own expenses until released. The Lords grant the prayer of the petition, and command the provost and bailies of Edinburgh and the keeper of the said tolbooth to receive the said Robert from the supplicants or those who may have the charge of his convoy within three hours after he is presented to them, as they will answer at their peril.

Supplication by David Vaus, sometime of Blance, as follows:—Their Lordships are aware of the trouble and misery he has sustained in connection with his actions before the Lords of Session against the deceased Mr. George Butler, who having meddled with his whole estate, exposed him to the rigour of his creditors, and he was imprisoned by them until he had assigned to them all benefit that might accrue to him from these actions. These are now under submission, and when they are fully settled his creditors will obtain satisfaction; but some of them “cannot in patience await the conclusion of the submission.” He is therefore obliged to have recourse to their Lordships and to crave their protection; and this the Lords grant to him till 23rd September next.

Supplication by David Bowman of Southhous, as follows:—Last Council day their Lordships were pleased to commit him to ward within the tolbooth of Edinburgh, and lay him in irons there, on the complaint of Bessie Lindsay, his spouse. He acknowledges the wrong done by him to her, and the just and equitable procedure of their Lordships thereupon, and as he is heartily sorry for his miscarriage, so "in token of his trew resupiscence" he is willing to underly any course their Lordships may prescribe for his wife's satisfaction and to enact himself for her safety and to perform to her all honest and christian duties, or otherwise he is content that she live separate from him for a time "untilt it please God to joyne thair hearts and affectiouns togidder in a more Christiane harmonie," in which case he will provide to her such aliment as their Lordships upon consideration of his means may appoint. Charge having been given to the said Bessie Lyndsey, and also to Andrew Simsoun, one of the bailies of Edinburgh, in name of the provest and remanent bailies, to produce the petitioner, and he and his wife compearing, he enacted himself in 1000 merks for his wife's safety until Candlemas next, and that he would appear before their Lordships upon the first Council day of November next when, in the event of their non-agreement before that date, the Lords will appoint a suitable aliment for his wife. Meanwhile because she affirms that she cannot cohabit with him without danger, the Lords ordain him to pay to her £50 for her maintenance and lodging till Candlemas next. This sum the said David instantly paid, and the Lords ordained the provost and bailies of Edinburgh to put him to liberty.

Complaint by the provost and bailies of Dundie as follows:—On 26th July last William Alexander, merchant burgess of Dundie, obtained a decree from their Lordships requiring the complainers to liberate him from their tolbooth in so far as he is warded there at the instance of James Durhame of Pitkerro, Peter Balmanno of Carlongie, Robert Murrey, burgess of Dundie, Marion Gleg and James Cochrane, her spouse. He then alleged that he had letters of protection from his Majesty, but he never told them of nor showed them this protection until after he had been arrested on letters of caption and warded, for if he had they would never have meddled with him, but now that he has been committed they stand liable to the party for the sums due if he escapes or is set at liberty. Further, they would have run the danger of this for obedience of their Lordships' decree, but that the said William was arrested within their ward on 4th August instant at the instance of Thomas Muddie, merchant burgess of Edinburgh, and on 20th June last at the instance of John Dinmure for certain debts due to them; and the decree does not cover these. Moreover, the protection bears that it is only to be operative if the said William pays the interest of the sums due to his creditors, and as he has not yet done so, he cannot claim the benefit of it. Yet he intends to put the complainers to the horn if they do not liberate him. They have found caution to do so if their Lordships decide that they ought, and meanwhile crave suspension of the horning. The complainers appearing by Thomas Halyburtoun, their provost, and the defender by John Bathkat, messenger, who produced the protection and the letters of horning referred to, the Lords, after hearing parties, find the horning orderly and ordain the same to be put to further execution for putting of the defender to libertie; and they declare that this decree shall be a sufficient exoneration to the said provost and bailies, and shall free them from all danger at the hands of all persons at whose instance the defender is arrested.

Complaint by John, Lord Stewart of Tracquir, and Sir Thomas Hope of Craighall, King's Advocate, as follows:—The said Lord Tracquir is heavilie molested in his lands of _____, in Selkirkshire, by Andrew Scot in Skabcleuche, Janet Tait, his spouse, Andrew Scot, his son, and James Scot, his servant; Thomas Nicoll in Thirlestane, Janet Laidla, his spouse, Jacke Laidla there, Malie Batie, his spouse, Hab Turnebull, his servant, and Hab Laidla there, who intend by deed and oppression to debar the complainer from his said lands and make them unprofitable to him. For this effect, in August, 1629, these persons came to the said lands armed with staves, swords and other weapons, and with great kents made for the purpose, "chaist and dang the said lords hors and nolt pastouring upon the ground of the saids lands for the tyme, gorred and mangled sindrie of thame and slew others, and hes thair servants daylie and nightlie attending about his saids lands awaiting the opportunitie to hound and slay his bestiall pastouring upon the same." In consequence of this none of the complainer's tenants or servants dare put any of their goods upon these lands. Charge having been given to the persons named, and the pursuers appearing but none of the defenders, the Lords ordain them to be put to the horn and escheat; and that no suspension be granted to them but in presence of the whole Council.

Complaint by Daniel Grahame, servitor to Mr. Adam Hepburne, keeper-depute of the Privy Seal, as follows:—On 3rd September instant he was doing his lawful business within the dwelling house of _____ beside the Tolbooth of Edinburgh, when Robert Dryisdail, flesher in Edinburgh, without any cause assailed him, "and with ane fleshours braig, gave him twa cruell wounds on the head to the effusioun of his blood and perrell of his lyfe, and than fled, thinking the compleaner had beene slaine." The pursuer appearing by his master, Mr. Adam Hepburne, but the defender not compearing, the Lords ordain him to be denounced rebel and escheat.

Paterson, his tenant, against Alexander Home of Gamilscheills for carrying off legally pointed goods and hamesucken. Although the wearing of hagbuts and pistols has been often prohibited yet, on last, Alexander Home of Gamilscheills, and Clariades Robesoun in Milknow, with some others, came to the said lands of Kingside and pastured there nolt and sheep. When for this cause the said Gavin Patersoun lawfully pointed these goods, these persons, with convocation of the lieges to the number of , armed with swords, hagbuts and pistols, came on August thereafter to the said lands, and violently carried off the said goods, and then by way of hamesucken went to the said Gavin's dwelling house to have taken his life if they had found him. The pursuers appearing by Mr. Adam Hepburne, and the defenders being also present, both parties agreed to submit the trial and ordering of this complaint to Thomas, Earl of Hadintoun, Lord Privy Seal of this kingdom. Counter-complaint by Clariades Robesoun and others against William Smith and others. Counter complaint by Clariades Robesoun in Mylneknow, and Patrick Caldcleuche, his servant, as follows:—On August last, while the said Patrick was herding his master's goods at the marches of Mylneknow and Kingside, William Smith in Wauchtoun, Gavin Patersoun in Kingside, and John Fortoun in Penscheill, with others, armed with "bandit stalffes" and other weapons, came to him and assaulted him, "gave him manie bauche and blae straiques in diverse parts of his bodie, whairwith they strake him to the ground, and than with ane bandit stalffe straike him on the foreheid ane great and deidlie wound to the effusioun of his blood and perrell of his lyfe." The said Clariades Robesoun appearing for himself and his servant, and the defenders appearing by Mr. Adam Hepburne, both parties agreed to submit the settlement of the complaint to Thomas, Earl of Hadintoun. Complaint by John Wauch in Melrose and William Chisholm in Darnick, servants of Thomas, Earl of Haddington, against Mark Home and others for carrying prohibited weapons and for assault. Complaint at the instance of Thomas, Earl of Hadintoun, Lord Privy Seal, Sir Thomas Hope of Craighall, as King's Advocate, John Wauche in Melros and William Chisholme in Dernick, servants to the said Earl, as follows:—Though the wearing of hagbuts and pistols has been often prohibited, yet when the said Earl sent his two servants foresaid to his wood of Sorrolesfeild to cut some trees for repairing his mills of Melros, Mark Home, son of the late Laird of Coldingknowes, Alexander Ridpeth, servitor to Alexander Home, brother of the said Mark, and James Baillie and James Wricht, servitors to the Lady Coldingknowes, armed with swords, hagbuts and pistols, assailed the said two servants, drew their swords and struck at them therewith, "bendit thair pistolets of purpose to have shott them," and would not permit them to cut any wood, but forced them to flee for their lives. The pursuers appearing by Mr. Adam Hepburne, their procurator, and of the defenders, James Wricht and Alexander Ridpeth, and probation being referred to their oaths of verity, which were negative, the Lords assoilzied them, but they ordain the said James Baillie and Mark Home to be put to the horn and escheat for non-compearance. Complaint by Ludovick Ker of Easter Crichtoun, as follows :—On August last, Thomas Rutherford in Symontoun, accompanied by wrights with axes and other instruments, came to the complainer's house in Easter Crichtoun, and forcibly breaking up the gates, went to a loft in which the complainer's tenants had some corn, broke up the door of it and carried off the said corn; and on a subsequent day of the same month the said Thomas went to the complainer's lands, which were sown with wheat, and "shoore the said wheat to thair awne behove," to the complainer's heavy hurt and loss. The pursuer compearing, but not the defender, the Lords ordain the latter to be put to the horn and escheat.

Complaint by Ludovic Ker of Easter Crichton against Thomas Rutherford for damage done to the complainer's property and for theft.

Complaint by Andrew Kellie, burgess of Aberdein, as follows :—John Duff, his brother-in-law, in 1623 "spuilyed" his whole goods, and has ever since kept up the same, including his own sister's abuliaments, who is the complainer's wife. The complainer obtained a decree against the said John for making restitution, but he, to frustrate its execution, first bought an assignation from Stevin Boyd, merchant in Edinburgh, on a mutual bond between them to the effect that "whatever he shall deprehend belonging to the compleaner the one halfe sall belong to himselfe and the other half to the said Stevin," and upon these he caused the complainer to be warded within the tolbooth of Aberdein, where he has now remained a long time. Upon the complainer's petition to them, the Lords of Session ordained the said John Duff either to set the complainer at liberty or maintain him suitably in ward, but by some private dealing he procured the abstraction of this bill, and has since bought other two bonds over the complainer's head, on which he has raised letters and intends to arrest him in ward in the name of John Forbes of Bannagask, which he has borrowed for the purpose. The pursuer appearing by Duff, his spouse, but the defender not appearing, the Lords ordain the provost and bailies of Aberdein to liberate the pursuer from their tolbooth in so far as he is warded by the said John Duff either in his own name or as assignee for any other person.

Complaint by Andrew Kellie, burgess of Aberdein, against John Duff, his brother-in-law, for illegal warding.

Complaint by James Crichton of Fendraucht, as follows :—On 21st May last Gregor M^cGregour of that Ilk in Dalnabo in Strathawin, Margaret Sinclair, his wife, Callum Bayne M^cGregour in Strathawin, Alaster M^cGregour M^cNeill there, James Logane, servitor to Patrick Murrey, younger, in Strathawin, Gordoun, son of the deceased James Gordoun, there, James Baine M^cInneis in Glenawin, Ferquhar and John Dargs in Glenlivet, Callum Baine in Badzenoch, Angus M^cAlaster M^cEane there, Lauchlane M^cAlaster M^cEane, his brother, there, James Gordoun, son of Alaster Gordon, officer in Badzenoch to Lord Gordoun, Alexander Cruikschanke alias Ridheid at Martinekirck in Strabogie, Gregor M^cEan Dwy, forester to the Marquis of Huntlie of the Quhytwod and deer, Donald M^cGregour in Bellibeg, William M^cJohne

Complaint by James Crichton of Fendraucht against the Marquis of Huntly, George, Lord Gordon, and Lady Rothiemay, whom he accuses of failing to restrain certain of their tenants from injuring the goods of the complainer.

M^cInneis M^cWilliame Mair in Auchinkyle, James Bayne M^cInneis and James Darg there, John M^cEane Dwy in Badzenoch, Callum M^cGregour, father's brother's son to Callum Oig in Strathawin, and Adam Gordoun, son of the deceased Sir Adam Gordoun of Park "in Carnwhelpe within a myle to the yett of Strabogie," all dwelling under the Marquis of Huntlie and Lord Gordoun, and John Gordoun in Carnehill under the Lady Rothemay, were put to the horn at the complainer's instance for not finding caution to appear before the Justice and undergo their trial for the thefts, heirships, depredations and slaughters committed by them, but to this horning they pay no regard, and the said Marquis of Huntlie, Lord Gordoun and Lady Rothemay are their landlords on whose lands they dwell, and to whom they pay "maill and dewtie with thair calpes and herezelds," and whom they accompany "at oastings and huntings," and ought therefore to answer for them. Charge having been given to them to appear and show cause why they should not answer for these persons and exhibite them to justice, and the pursuer appearing by Mr. James Baird, his procurator, and George, Lord Gordon, appearing for himself and his father, the Marquis, and Lady Rothemay by Mr. Henry Kinros, her procurator, Lord Gordoun became bound for the men and tenants of himself and his father that they will not molest the pursuer in any way in time coming and that if they fail herein, he will make good such damage at the sight of their Lordships, whereupon Mr. James Baird passed simply from his pursuit against them, and agreed to these persons being relaxed from the horn. In the case of John Gordoun in Carnehill, Mr. Henry Kinross produced a decree of removing which had been recovered by Lady Rothemay against him, and in terms of which he was lawfully removed; but Mr. James Baird replied that this was only a form and pretext, as the said John Gordoun still retained possession of his farm, and was presently dwelling upon the Lady's land, whereupon the Lords ordain her to remove the said John Gordoun before 15th November next under a penalty of 500 merks, and that meanwhile she will be held accountable for any injury done by him during his remaining upon her lands.

Petition by the provost and bailies of Haddington for direction as to the punishment of Christian Paterson, who has been found guilty of witchcraft.

Petition by the provost and bailies of Hadintoun as follows:—Their Lordships have granted to them a commission for trying Christian Patersoun, wife of George Carmichael in Hirdmestoun, on a charge of witchcraft, and on 9th August last she was convicted by an assise of the following points—(1) "the laying on of ane heavie disease upon Jonnet Forrester, spouse to George Baillie of Templefeild"; (2) "laying on of ane madnesse and phrenesie upon Katharine Allane, her servant"; (3) "for the cruell murdering be witchcraft of umquhill Elizabeth Caldcleuche, spous to Archibald Maissoun in Samwelstoun and Bessie Maissoun, his daughter"; (4) "the cruell murdering be witchcraft of James Knight in Hirdmistoun"; (5) "for laying on by witchcraft of ane heavie sicknesse upon Elizabeth Andersoun"; (6) "for the death

Supplication by Dame Marion Boyd, Countess of Abercorn, that she may have licence to pass the winter at her lodging at the Canongate.

Supplication by Dame Marion Boyd, Countess of Abercorn, as follows:—Their Lordships granted to her their permission to remove from Duntarvie to her places of Blackstoun and Paisley until Candlemas; but these places are somewhat ruinous and therefore unfit for her residence during winter in respect of her great infirmity and sickness; and, moreover, the ministers of these places, to whom she is unwilling to give any matter of offence, are not content that she should remain in the neighbourhood, wherefore she craves that their Lordships would allow her to go to the Cannogait and remain there this winter. The Lords grant her this permission to repair to her lodging in the Cannogait and remain there until 1st May next, seeing that Claud Hamiltoun of Strabran, Master of Paisley, her son, compearing personally, has become cautioner for her under the penalties contained in the former act that she shall remain there during the foresaid space.

Supplication by Lachlan M^cLean of Dowart anent the barony of Dowart of which his brother has granted him possession.

Supplication by Lachlan M^cClaine of Morverne, as follows:—He is lawfully provided to the lands and barony of Dowart by M^cClaine of Dowart, his elder brother, by virtue of which the performance of the articles and conditions prescribed by their Lordships to the Islesmen devolve upon him as master and landlord in respect of these lands, and he has been anxiously careful since his entry to observe these. But some of his unfriends, envious of the favour shown by his said brother to him, have combined with the purpose not only of making his brother's grant ineffectual, but also of bringing him under their Lordships' censure through the violation of the foresaid articles. For this end they have laboured both with his said brother and his father by false information and malicious suggestions until they have alienated their affection from him and enraged them to seek his utter wreck and overthrow, and he has been debarred from his lands, not daring to go thither for fear of his life. His unfriends and other disorderly persons within these bounds intend to take "ane licentious libertie of sorning and oppressing the poore people in these bounds" so as to bring him under censure for their disorders. He therefore craves that they would grant a commission to Archibald, Lord Lorne, to aid and assist him in recovering and maintaining his right and possession of the barony of Dowart, repressing the disorders therein, and taking an effectual course for the preservation of the peace there. Their Lordships grant the prayer of this petition.

Supplication by Michael Carlill in Cokisfeild, as follows:—In June last, upon false information given by Sir John Maxwell of Conhaith to the Viscount of Drumlanrig that the supplicant had stolen some gold from him, he was warded in the place of Drumlanrig without any legal charge, and on complaining thereof to their Lordships, he was produced before them on 26th July last, when he was ordained to be liberated on finding caution to appear for trial before the Lords Tracquair and Dalzell and the Laird of Lag in their justice court at Dumfreis on 24th August last, under the penalty of 1000 merks. He and his cautioner appeared there that day, but as the commissioners were not all present the diet was continued until 15th September, and his cautioner was ordered to stand good for his compareance then; whereupon he took instruments of his readiness to appear and of the absence of his accuser. He also kept this second diet but neither judge nor party appeared. By this their Lordships may see that his accuser has no other end in view than causelessly to bring his life, estate and good name under the danger of the law, and draw him to endless attendance and expense. He therefore craves that their Lordships would grant an act in his favour. The Lords do so, discharging the Viscount of Drumlanrig and the Commissioners of the Middle Shires of all further proceeding against the petitioner in the above matter, he finding caution in the books of Adjournal in 1000 merks to appear on fifteen days' citation before the Justice and his deutes and there answer to any charge to be made against him by Sir John Maxwell or any other person.

Complaint by Hantoun in Balhaggartie, as follows :—On 25th September, 1627, William Troup, eldest lawful son of William Troup of Pendreich, and John Strauchane in Fettercarne, became cautioners by act of caution in the books of Privy Council, that David Ramsay, sergeant to Sir Alexander Strauchane of Thornetoun, would send back from Germanie to this kingdome, Robert Hantoun, the complainer's son, whom the said David had sent away with some soldiers, before the following Yule, under the penalty of £200, which in the event of failure they were to pay to the complainer on 1st February thereafter. Now, the said David Ramsay has not sent back his son, and so the said cautioners ought to be decerned to pay the said penalty. Charge having been given to the said William Troup, and the pursuer compearing by Mr. David Mitchell, minister at Edinburgh, and the defender being personally present, the latter explained that the said Robert Hantoun was dead within the time allowed for his exhibition, and that he had sent his sergeant from Cowpnahome [Copenhagen] to Lückestade [Glückstadt] six weeks before the said feast of Yuile to bring back the said Robert Hantoun. The Lords find the answer relevant, and they assign to the defender the first Council day of February next to prove either by witnesses or by a certificate from the burgomaster of Lukestade that the said Robert Hantoun was dead before Yule 1627, so that it was impossible to exhibit him; and he acted himself to do this under the penalty of 500 merks. The Lords further reserve to the pursuer all action competent to him against the said David Ramsay for the wrongful taking away of his son.

tending right to these lands and mines and disdaining to pursue his claim (if he any has) in a legal way, resolved by way of deed, bangsterie and oppression, to debar and seclude the complainers from these lands and mines, in which they are heritably infest by lawful securities. For this end he has disponed his pretended right to Sir William Baillie of Lamingtoun, who upon 19th October last, directed the said David, with Alexander Hamiltoun in Glendorchie, John Shankland in Lamingtoun, Arthur Baillie there, Richard Tennent there, William Tennent, elder and younger, there, Robert Baillie, natural son of the deceased Matthew Baillie, William McWeill, servitor to the Laird of Lamingtoun, and James Baillie, his brother, all armed with hagbuts and pistols from Edinburgh to Leidhill, where, upon the following day, they violently entered the house possessed by the said Laird of Annystoun, and in his absence struck and wounded his wife, children, and servants, "threw thame over staires, thrust thame to the doores, threatned thame with thair gunnes and pistolets and than closed the yetts, brake up the lockfast loomes" within the house, and dealt with them as they pleased. And on the next day, the 21st, the said Sir William assembled some three score persons, all armed with hagbuts and pistols and other weapons, and leading them to the said lead mines, left them "at the backe of ane know," then he personally accompanied by ten persons went to the place of Leidhill, "conferred with these who wer within the hous, dranke with thame, went to the toun of Leidhill, commandit the worke- men to worke in name of the said David Foulis, thereafter departed from the hous ane quarter of a myle and sent backe to these being within the hous Williame Shankiland, William and Richard Tennents, his servants, commanding thame to enter the hous and to concurre with the rest; lykeas the said Sir Williame, how soone he come to Lamingtoun, sent ane laid of meale with ane gunne to the persouns foresaids the better to strengthen thame and make thame stand out." John Mure, being informed of all this, went to William, Earl of Angus, heritable bailie and justice of peace within these bounds, and desired him to repossess him in the said house, and the Earl sent three of his servants with his clerk to crave the house to be rendered. But these, being "answered with threatning and reproachefull speeches," the Earl was obliged to go in person to the said house, "where having represented to the saids persons thair bold attempt and insolence and craved delyverie of the hous to him as his Majesteis justice of the peace, they verie proudlie shott out gunnes, pistolets and threw stones at [out] the windowes of the hous at the said Erle and his servants, so as he wes forced for saulfetie of his honnour and credite to breake up the yetts of the place; but how soone he entered the said Williame McWeill presented ane bendit hacquebut to the said Erle and had not failed to have shott him thairwith if he had not retired backe." Charge having been given to the said Sir William Baillie and the other persons named,

and the pursuers appearing, the said George Foullis also representing the daughters of the deceased Mr. Robert Foullis, and the defenders likewise being personally present, the Lords after hearing parties and their witnesses, find "that the said David Foullis violentlie tooke the hous lybellit without warrand or order of law, and that the said William M^cWeill, Johne Shankiland, Alexander Hamiltoun, William Tennent, younger, and Richard Tennent, come to him within the hous and assisted him in the keeping thair of aganis the said Williame, Erle of Angus, who come there and in his Majesteis name craved delyverie of the hous to be made to him, and that they had ane hacquebut with thame in the hous," for which insolence they commit them to ward in the tolbooth of Edinburgh; and they assoilzie Sir William Baillie, James Baillie, his brother, Arthur Baillie in Lamingtoun, Robert Baillie, son of Matthew Baillie, and William Tennent, elder, against whom nothing was proved by the witnesses. Further, the Lords ordain the said Earl of Angus to repossess the said John Mure of Annatstoun in the said house, to be enjoyed by him until he be legally removed; and the said Laird of Lamingtoun and John Mure to find lawsurety to each other, the former in 3000 merks, and the latter in 1000 merks.

Fol. 279, a.

Complaint by John Mure of Annystoun, as follows:—In addition to the manifold wrongs he has endured at the hands of the Laird of Lamingtoun and his brothers, which he patiently bore, in the hope that forbearance would have drawn them to a milder course, though he found that it only increased their insolence, on October last James Baillie, brother of the said Laird, went to James Stratoun, writer, whom he knew to be a common friend to them both, "and desired him in his name to give up with the compleaner and to assure him that it sould not ly in his power to keepe Cliddisdaill." Both parties compearing, and they and their witnesses having been heard, the Lords find the charge verified, and for this great insolence they commit James Baillie to ward within the tolbooth of Edinburgh, and ordain both parties to find law-surety to each other in 1000 merks.

 able manner, and with violence broke up the doors of the said house, entered therein, put hands on the complainers, and "band thame with cords and tows as if they had beene theeves, and caried thame captives to the Castell of Dowglas," where the said Earl still detains them as prisoners, without any lawful warrant or cause. The pursuers compearing personally, and the said Earl also compearing for himself and the remanent defenders, the pursuers were asked if they intended to insist in their complaint, which they one and all said they would not do; and his Majesty's Advocate, hearing this "and that they would not concur with him therein nor give him light and informatioun thereanent," he also passed from the same. Complaint by Robert Millar, sometime at the mill of Swynewod, against the kin of the late Patrick Craw, son of Patrick Craw in Greenhead, for refusing to accept assythment in connection

Complaint by Robert Miller, sometime at the mill of Swynewod, as follows:—In the year 1618 Patrick Craw, son of Patrick Craw in Greinheid, accidentally meeting the complainer near the town of Swynewod, upbraided him with "some injurious words," whereupon they fell to blows "with their fists allanerlie," after which the said Patrick lived about six months and then died of an ordinary sickness. The kin and friends of the deceased man, intending to abuse their friendship and credit, "which in these bounds is great, and to use ane led assise agains the compleaner" raised a criminal pursuit against him before the Justice, and he, fearing their local influence, laid the case before his Majesty. The King has thereupon granted to him a remission for the said slaughter (if any be) upon his giving satisfaction to the party, dated at Qwhitehall, 14th June 1630. Upon his return to this kingdom the complainer accordingly entered into treaty with the deceased man's kin, but they utterly refuse to accept any offers, and have cited him to appear before the Justice on 16th November instant to answer for the said slaughter. Charge having been given to Jean Crow as relict, Alison Home in Eist Restoun as mother, Robert Crow as brother, Elspit and Jean Crow as sisters, Peter Home in Aittoun, spouse of the said Elspit, and Mr. Alexander Smith, spouse of the said Jean, and the pursuer compearing by Robert Douglas of Blaikester and Mr. Robert Craig, his procurators, but of the defenders only Mr. Alexander Smith and Janet Crow, his spouse, and parties having been heard, the Lords in respect of the foresaid remission ordain the Justice, Justice Clerk, and their deputes to pass from the pursuit of the complainer on this charge. The said Robert Douglas then became cautioner for the pursuer that he will give such assythement and satisfaction to the parties interested as the Lords may determine; and the Lords further ordain that the said Robert Miller shall not resort to the town of Swynewod at any time hereafter without their Lordships' license under such penalties as they may think to impose upon him if he disobey.

His captors refuse to prosecute him, and intend to wreck and undo him by long imprisonment, though they are "now fullie perswaded by cleere informatioun frome the countrie people that the compleaner is altogidder ignorant of the slaughter." He is but a poor man unable to find caution for his compearance to trial if he were set at liberty, but seeing he is now in prison and ready to abide his trial, if his incarcerators will not prosecute, reason and equity crave that he be liberated. Charge having been given to James Thom, brother of the said deceased George, Barbara Birnie his widow, James Thom his son, and Andrew Birnie her brother, as also to Alexander Forbes of Pitsligo, sheriff of Aberdein, for his interest, and none of them compearing, and the pursuer compearing by Quintin Kennedie, Writer to the Signet, his procurator, the Lords ordain the said sheriff to liberate the pursuer and suffer him to pass wherever he pleases in so far as he is imprisoned on the above charge.

Complaint by Uthrid M'Dougall of Mondurke, as follows:—He is informed that he has been put to the horn at the instance of William Trotter in Blaikburne for failing to pay to him the sum of 400 merks which was imposed upon him as a fine for wounding the said William with a hagbut and for not finding caution to satisfy the surgeon who cured him. He has now paid the said sum with the 50 merks additional granted to the said William for expenses, and also satisfied him for the surgeon's cure, as a discharge subscribed by the said William on 3d
 August last testifies, and he therefore craves relaxation from the horning.
 Pursuer compearing personally and producing the discharge and the said William Trotter appearing by Mr. George Trotter, his procurator, the Lords suspend the horning aforesaid, but only in so far as it concerns the said William Trotter.

Complaint by Sir Thomas Hope of Craighall, King's Advocate, Adam Abircrombie of Aldrayne, and Alexander Abircrombie of Birkinbog, as follows:—The bearing of hagbuts and pistols, and convocation of the lieges in arms has been often forbidden by the laws, yet on 4th September last, " being Sunday, the said Adam Abircrombie having come to the kirk of Aldrayne, quhilk is his ordinarie parish kirk, and preassing to sit down in his proper desk there, where John Leith of Harthill wes sitting he desired the said John to sitt up and to suffer the compleaner to sitt beside him, quhairunto he verie prouddie answered in the hearing of the hail people that he sould have no seate there and did quhat in him lay to stirre up the compleaner to enter in ane quarrell with him in the kirk, quhilk he Christianelie forboore, out of ane respect to his Majesteis lawes and discipline of the Kirk." Further, on the 11th of the same month William Areskine in Tocher, Alexander Areskine in Dorlethin, M^r Alexander Strauchine, John Leith of Newlands, George

Leith, his brother, and George Scot in Aldharthill, with others and convocation of the lieges to the number of persons, armed with swords, staves and other weapons and the prohibited hagbutts and pistols, came to the said Alexander Abircrombie's seat in the said kirk, "placed themselfes violentlie therein of purpose to have debarred him therefra, so as he wes forced for eshewing of trouble in the kirk to stay in the hous of Patrik Leith, and sent to the said Williame to inquire of him why he thus debarred him frome his owne seate; who returned him this answer that he sould dee before the said Alexander gott rounge there. And thereafter he went to the kirk where he and his complices walked up and down in the view of the hail people in a swaggering and insolent maner, bragging that he would try the mater with the compleaner hand to neiff and if he refused he appealed his eldest sone or anie Abircrombie in Scotland and desired him to sett a day when he would keepe the best part of the kirkyaird aganis the compleaner and all that would take his part in Scotland; quhairby the minister wes forced to forbear all divine service and to dismisse the people that day." Moreover, on the Tuesday thereafter, the said William Areskine, accompanied and armed as above, came to the said Alexander's dwelling house of Westhall and lay about it a long time, "crying aloud in contempt and derisioun, 'Where is the Laird? Darre he now be-seene?' callit upon one of the compleaners servants, commanding him to tell him that at the nixt meeting he sould try his courage in another maner, with a great nomber of the lyke irritating and provoking speeches."
 And now recently, upon 13th September last, when in walking peaceably beside the Water of Don the said Adam and Alexander Abircrombie accidentally fell in with the said John Leith of Harthill, John Leith of Newlands and George Scot, who were then in company with the Bishop of the Yles, no sooner did the said John Leith perceive the complainers than he called for his guns for the purpose of shooting them. Charge having been given to the said John Leith of Harthill, William and Alexander Areskine, Mr. Alexander Strauchane, George Scot, John Leith of Newlands, and George Leith his brother, of whom only John Leith of Harthill and William Areskine compeared, and the pursuers being personally present, and parties having been heard, the Lords assoilzie the said William Areskine from the whole points of this complaint, because the pursuers having referred the proof of the same to the oath of verity of the said William, he being sworn, denied that it was true. [Nothing is said about the remanent defenders.]

Charge having been given to James Hendersoun, skipper in Prestoun, and Friderick Cooke in Pittinweem, who both compeared, and the pursuer appearing by Captain John Forbes, his procurator, the Lords, after hearing parties, "considering that this is a peece of service quhilk cheeflie concernes his Majestie both in honnour and state, the disappointing whair of will tend verie farre to his Majesteis offence and displeasure," ordain the parties to meet to-morrow at eight o'clock in the forenoon with William Dick, bailie, burgess of Edinburgh, "to the intent he may travell betuix thame for satting of thair differenceis anent the conditions of thair employment in this service." And if they cannot then come to an agreement, the Lords command the provost and bailies of Edinburgh to send "some sufficient and honest men to take tryell of the saids defenders thair shippes and how and upon what conditions they may serve and undergoe this service, and accordinglie to caus thame embrace the service upon suche reasonable conditions as they sall prescryve and sett down; or otherwayes to caus arreist their shippes quhairthrow they depairt not for anie other employment." And the defenders enacted themselves, each in £2000, to appear before the Lords on Thursday next, the 17th instant, in the event of their not coming to an agreement and hear their Lordships' further pleasure in this matter.

Complaint by Mr. John Patersoun, parson of Aldhamstockes, as follows:—He is lawfully provided to the benefice of Aldhamstockes and the parsonage and vicarage teinds of the same, in virtue whereof he (as all his predecessors were) is in possession of the teind fish of the parish of Colbrandspeth (which is a pendicle of the kirk of Aldhamstockes) "by leading, teinding and drawing of the haill teind fishes, great and small, of all fishes and all boats within the said parish;" and his possession thereof has never been questioned until that, lately, Mr. James Nicolsoun of Colbrandspeth pretending right thereto, and disdainig to prosecute his pretended claim in a lawful way, is resolved by way of "deid, bangsterie and oppressioun to debarre and seclude the compleaner from the saids teind fishes and to appropriat the same to himselfe. And for this effect he verie imperiouslie discharges the fishers to pay to the compleaner any teind fishe, and if they refuse, he at his awne hand without warrand or commissioun exacts and extorts frome everie boat the soume of sax shillings aucht penneis, quhairby manie of the fishers seeke unto others harbereis and landing parts." Complaint by John Leslie, younger of Pitcaple, that he is unjustly held responsible for the maintenance of John Meldrum, now a prisoner in the tolbooth on the charge of burning the Tower of Frendraught.

Complaint by John Leslie, younger of Pitcaple, as follows:—Their Lordships know that John Meldrum, sometime in Badinscoth, having compeared before them for trial on the charge of burning the tower of Fendraucht, was committed to ward in the tolbooth of Edinburgh in November 1630, and has since remained in that imprisonment upon the complainer's heavy charges. The prisoner has no means of his own, and it is only right that those who insist on his remaining in prison should maintain him there and that the complainer be relieved. Charge having been given to James Crichtoun of Fendraucht and Mr. James Ferquharsoun, agent for the Marquis of Huntlie and Lord Gordoun, the pursuer compeared personally, also the said Mr. James Ferquharsoun, and Mr. James Baird, as procurator for the Laird of Fendraucht, who declared that he would not insist against the said John Meldrum and should not therefore be burdened with his maintenance. Mr. James Ferquharsoun, however, on behalf of his clients, desired that all parties interested in the case should be called; whereupon the Lords free and relieve the pursuer of all further maintenance of the said John Meldrum during his remaining in ward on the above charge, and ordain the Marquis of Huntlie and the Earl of Erroll to be cited to hear them ordained to support the said John Meldrum in ward from this date.

Complaint by Sir Thomas Hope of Craighall, King's Advocate, and William Areskine in Tocher, as follows:—The bearing of hagbuts and pistols and convocation of the lieges, has been often strictly prohibited, yet, upon some sinister information made about the said William Areskine to Alexander Abercrombie of Birkinboig touching a seat and desk in the kirk of Rayne "wherein he had priviledge to accommodat himselfe for hearing of the preaching," and some other particulars about which he was innocent, and though, out of his respect for the said Alexander being "his special and tender freind," he went to him on the Wednesday preceding the Sabbath, and cleared himself to his apparent satisfaction, as they parted "in verie kynde and loving termes of freindship," the said Alexander, knowing that the complainer would be at the kirk on the following Sunday as usual, resolved to give him some notable affront and disgrace that day. For this effect he consulted with Adam Abircrombie of Aldrayne and, between the Wednesday and the Sunday, they or either of them went personally to such gentlemen of their kin and friendship in the country as would rise with them and accompany them on that day to the kirk of Rayne in hostile and warlike manner. Accordingly George Leslie, apparent of Kinragie, Alexander Leith of Newrayne, Hector Abercrombie of Fetterneir, and Walter Barclay, servitor to John Leslie, elder of Pitcaple, with convocation of the lieges to the number of eighty persons on horse and foot, all armed with "jackes, secreits, mailzie coats, plaitsleaves, stealbonnets, gantlets, and the forbidden hagbuts and pistols," came at the bidding of the said Alexander and Adam Abercrombie, who were also present with them, to the kirk-toun of Rayne for the purpose of debarring the complainer from his seat in the kirk. "And being in the said kirk-toun quhilk is in view of the kirk and kirkyaird they walked in ane hostile and warrelike maner with two captans marching upon the heads of thair companeis hard by the kirk without respect to the Lords Sabbath, and they remained in a swaggering maner in and about the toun sending some of thair nomber hard to the yaird dykes; by occasioun whair of the minister fearing some great evill and inconvenient caused locke the kirk doores; quhereat they being discontent they sent thair agents for thame to the minister that the doores of the kirk might be made patent to thame to the intent they might ather have debarred the said compleaner fra his seate and desk in the kirk or than have committed some insolent and disgracefull bravado upon him; bot the minister still perceaving thair violent course refused to opin the doores or to preache that day; lykeas in respect of the feare of thair tumult there wes no preaching." Charge having been given to the said Alexander, Adam and Hector Abercrombie, George Leslie and Alexander Leith, and they with the pursuers personally compearing and having been heard, as also several witnesses having been adduced by the pursuers, the Lords on their evidence found the said Adam Abircrombie guilty of convocation of the lieges in arms and bearing forbidden weapons and commit him to ward in the tolbooth of Edinburgh until he be released; but they assoilzie the said Laird of Birkinboig, because probation in his case being referred to his oath of verity, and he being sworn and questioned "if he sent or wrote for Alexander Gordoun of Achannochie to come and assist him at the kirk the tyme libellit the said Laird depoune that having intention to marie his daughter the Sondag lybellit he wrote for Achannachie to come to the mariage, bot that the mariage day wes preveened, she being married without his knowledge upon Tuisday; and denyed that he sent for the Laird of Geicht, Pitcaple, Iden, Adame Gordoun, nor for Williame and Robert Dempsters nor Ardlogie to come to the kirk to debarre the persewer frome his desk, and denyed that he had anie intention to doe anie suche violent deid." The Lords also modify the sum of £10 to each of the witnesses, and £5 to Mr. John Logie, minister, in addition to his first modification, to be paid by the producer.

Supplicatioun by Hector Abircrombie of Fetterneir as follows:—He is engaged as cautioner for Sir John Leslie of Wardes in certain great sums of money in respect of which legal process has passed against him, and upon some pretext or other Sir Alexander Gordoun of Cluny has seized upon his whole living, extending to eight score chalders of victual, which he uplifts for his own and the said Sir John's use, and meanwhile they have obtained from his Majesty protections for themselves and some of their friends but have left him out, and so have exposed him and his whole estate to the burden of their debts and the wreck of himself and his poor family. Charge having been given to the said Sir Alexander Gordoun and he and the supplicant compearing and having been heard, the Lords find "that the said persewer has bene unkyndelie and unthankfullie dealt with be the said Laird of Wardes and others who to his behove purchast the protection foresaid by omitting and leaving of the said persewer out of the same, he being ane of the said Laird of Wairdes his cautioners and heavilie distrest and troubled for his debts"; and as equity and justice demand that the burden shall not lie upon one while the others are shielded, they grant their protection to the supplicant in so far as respects his engagements for the said Laird of Wardes until 8th August next, which is the day to which the said protection in favour of the Laird of Wardes extends.

doun brokin Hieland men and sorners to burne, herrie and spoyle the compleaners tennents and thair lands." For this end he went in July last to Loquhaber and hired certain broken Highlanders, of whom the Tutor of Glenneves and his brother were the chief, and brought them armed with "bowes, darloches" and hagbuts and pistols on 28th July to the market of Aldrayne, where Laurence fair was held that day, the custom and toll of which belongs to the complainer, and they searched up and down the market for him in order to kill him; and if the parson of Rayne and some of the well-affected gentlemen had not persuaded them to depart they would have committed some great insolence. Charge having been given to the said John Leith, and he and the pursuers compearing and they and some witnesses having been heard, the Lords find the said John Leith guilty as libelled and commit him to ward within the tolbooth of Edinburgh, there to remain upon his own expenses until he be released.

[Omitted from its proper place in the Register.]

Complaint by David Foulis of Leidhills, Alexander Hamiltoun, his servant, John Schanklaw, William Tennent, Richard Tennent, and William McWeill, as follows:—Their Lordships committed them to ward within the tolbooth of Edinburgh upon the complaint of George Foulis, Master-Coiner, and John Mure of Anatstoun, of their alleged taking of the hous of Leidhill and removing Annatstoun's wife and children therefrom. As the matter in controversy between the parties has now been fully settled and their party has given consent, they ought now to be released from ward. The pursuers compearing by Sir William Baillie of Lamingtoun, and the said George Foulis and John Mure being also personally present as defenders, and having been heard, the Lords ordain the provost and bailies of Edinburgh to set the pursuers at liberty; because Sir William Baillie became cautioner for each of them in 100 merks that they would compear before the Lords on the first Council day of December next if they failed to agree with the said George Foulis and John Mure; and further in 300 merks for each of them that they would not molest the said George Foulis and John Mure.

Complaint by Robert M^cClellane of Balmaggan, his tutor, as follows:—Robert M^cClellane of Nuntoun is indebted to the complainer in great sums of money, for payment of which letters of horning and caption were issued against him, but these proving void their Lordships gave charge to the Steward of Kirkcudbright and his deputes for his apprehension. The said Steward went in person to execute the charge but was withstood by the said Robert, who has associated with himself “seven or eight vagabounds and brokin men, everie ane of thame furnished with ane long hacquebut and two pistolets, beside other armour, and they concurring togidder goe up and down the countrie boasting and threatning all suche aganis whome they have anie quèrrell, protesting and swearing with manie fearefull and execrable oathes that who ever sall presooome to take thame or meddle with their houses, that they sall have thair lyffes,” so that no magistrate can deal with them except by special commission with dispensation of whatever might fall out in execution thereof. Charge having been given to the said Robert M^cClellane of Nuntoun, who compeared personally, and the pursuers appearing by John Maxwell, brother of the said Edward Maxwell, the defender replied that what was concluded for in the summons against him could not be granted because he had offered to find caution to pay the pursuers all that was due to them. After hearing parties, the Lords ordain the said John Maxwell to produce the said Robert M^cClellane, pupil, before their Lordships on 15th December next, under pain of horning, to the end he may then make choice of his curators before the judge ordinary; and they ordain the defender to raise summonses against the said pupil's nearest of kin both on the father's and mother's sides, to appear that day before the Lords of Council and Session and hear the curators chosen; and they further ordain the defender to bring with him that day a sufficient and responsible cautioner for payment of his said debt. And to enable him to do this with safety they extend the protection already granted to him [ante p. 371] to the 25th of December next. The Lords further appoint that £10 be paid to every horseman and 10 merks to every footman of the witnesses by the said John Maxwell, producer.

Complaint by Mr. David Leitch, minister at Dundrennan, as follows: Fol. 297, a.
—Their Lordships imprisoned John Littill, servitor to the Earl of Nithsdail, until he should inform them where he was the night of the burning of the complainer's house and three days before; and he at his examination by some commissioners appointed for his trial denied that he had any boy with him that night, contradicting, in so doing, what he had written in his letter to Patrick Forrester, bailie of Kirkcudbright, in which he offered, ten days after the burning, to present himself and his boy with him the time foresaid for trial before the presbytery of Kirkcudbright. Further, the said John and John Murray, who is prisoner with him in the tolbooth of Edinburgh on the same charge, deny that ever they knew each other "till now of lait, the contrarie whair of hes beene provin be famous witnesses." Moreover, there are several persons in the country who have not yet been examined and who are able to give light and information in the case, but some refuse to compare unless compelled. Charge having been given to John McNaucht in Orchartoun, Janet Carsane, wife of John McQueill at the Nether Mylne, Patrick Forrester, burgess of Kirkcudbright, Jean Dalzell, wife of John Beck at Colledge, and Isabel and Jean Beck, their daughters, to compare and bear witness; and the pursuers appearing but none of these persons, the Lords ordain them to be put to the horn and escheat. Supplication for protection
by Sir David Boswell, knight, who had brought Lord Ochiltree
to Scotland.

Supplication by Sir David Boswell, knight, as follows:—He was appointed by his Majesty to attend Lord Uchiltree to this kingdom and deliver him up, which he has done, and he is now shortly to return and give an account to his Majesty not only of that service but of some other things given him in charge, the doing of which will occupy him some days. He has been informed that some persons intend to trouble and hinder him to his disgrace by letters of caption, against which he craves that their Lordships will grant him their protection. The Lords grant this untill 15th December next.

Protection to Archibald
Glen of Bar.

"The lyke protectioun grantit to Archibald Glen of Bar for coming in to Edinburgh to draw up securities for selling of his lands till the second of Februarie nixt.

Supplication by John Nairne, Commissary clerk of Dunkeld, as follows:—Their Lordships were pleased to give permisson to the Earl of Atholl to meddle with the registers of the Commissariat of Dunkeld and whole warrants thereof which were in the hands of James Crichton, lawful son of the deceased Thomas Crichton of Polcake, the last clerk, and the supplicant is informed that the said Earl “verie carefullie and dewtiefullie hes medled and intrometted with three score and four registers of the said commissariat and with ane number of warrands and processes thairof, and hes thame for the present in his custodie and keeping” until their Lordships shall ordain him to deliver them up to the supplicant to be kept by him as clerk during his lifetime, for the use of the lieges. He craves that their Lordships will give warrant for their delivery, and this the Lords do, ordaining the said Earl to hand over the said registers and warrants “to be keped and used be the supplicant as clerk of the said commissariat during all the dayes of his lyfetyme for extracting of suche decreits, sentences, testaments and processes as sall be usefull for his Majesteis lieges.”

Patrick Dicksoun, servitor to the Earl of Angus, appearing before the Lords, produced the missive letter following, directed to the Lord High Chancellor of this kingdom, which having been read, they delay all further proceeding in this matter, either against the said Patrick, or the Earl of Angus, his master, till a new occasion, provided that the Earl stands obliged, under the penalty of 1000 merks, to put the said Patrick from his service and company unless he satisfy the Kirk before next. “Followes the missive letter abonewrittin.—Right noble my most honourable good lord, Being informed that the Erle of Angus is actit under pane of 5000 merkes to putt Patrick Dicksoun, excommunicat, out of his service and companie betuix and Michaelmes last bypast, these ar to informe your lordship that upon some hope of his conformitie and some conference whiche he had with my lord of St Andrewes at Perth we wer content the mater sould be delayed, and the Erle of Angus sould not incurre the penaltie of the act at this tyme, provyding his lordship stand obleist to putt him frome his lordships service and companie except he satisfie the Kirk. So commending your lordship to the mercie of God I rest, etc. Subscribitur, JA. GLASGOW. Dated Glasgow, 16 November, 1631.”

Mr. Thomas Nicolson and Mr. Robert M^cGill, advocates, refuse to plead for Lord Ochiltree, on the ground that they are of kin to the Duke of Hamilton and the Earl of Haddington respectively—the two noblemen who had been accused by the said Lord Ochiltree.

“The whilk day M^r Thomas Nicolson and M^r Robert M^cGill, advocats, compeirand before the Counsell and being demanded if they would pleade for the Lord Uchiltreie aganis the dittay whereupon he is accused before his Majesteis Justice upon some informations givin by him reflecting upon some noblemen and counsellours of this kingdome, the said M^r Thomas alledged that he could not compeir as advocat for the said Lord in respect that he and the Erle of Hadinton his lait ladie were sister barnes, and the said M^r Robert M^cGill alledged that the Marqueis of Hamilton is the fourth and himselfe is the third of kin. With the quhilks alledgeances the Lords being well advised, the Lords of Secreit Counsell finds by interloquoutour that the declinatour foresaid propouned be the saids advocats and grounded upon their consanguinite and affinitie with the said Marqueis of Hamilton and Erle Hadinton is relevant to excuse and free thame from compeiring before the Justice on behalfe of the said Lord Uchiltreie.”

Supplication by Janet Home, Lady Samuelstoun, Captain James Hay, her husband, with Mr. William Kinnard, and John Home in their cautioners, as follows:—About a year ago, before her marriage, the said Janet was influenced by Sir George Home of Manderstoun to make an assignation to George Home, his son, of her tack of the teinds of the parish of Swintoun and of the fourteen husband lands of Quhitsum during her lifetime, upon the condition that the assignation should be kept by herself undelivered. But the said George came to her house in Berwick and in her absence medled with the said tack so that she is disappointed of her rent and all means whereby to satisfy her creditors. She and her husband have made a new assignation of these teinds and lands to the Master of Dupline, who has thereupon raised an action of reduction against the said Sir George Home before the Lords of Session, and as her presence will be necessary at the discussing of the case she craves their Lordships' protection for herself, husband and cautioners. Supplication by Sir John Waus of Barnbarroch, as follows:—He has been unadvisedly involved in a heavy burden of debt "by the alluring and flattering speeches of the lait tutour of Bombie, his father-in-law," but has "ane vehement and earnest desire" to relieve himself. This he proposes to do by selling part of his estate, which must be by "the advice of procurators and writers in Edinburgh," and his chief creditors have consented to his repairing thither. One or two others he has not been able to meet and arrange with, but as delay will be detrimental to all his creditors, he craves their Lordships' warrant for the security of his person. The Lords grant this to him till 31st March next.

Cannogait, for which the said Francis Durhame is obliged to pay her four chalders of good and sufficient victual, two parts meal and one part beir, during her lifetime. But for six years past he has most unnaturally and fraudfully withheld this victual from her, and when she charged him for it he always obtained a suspension. Having no means to follow up the pursuit, she "is redacted to great extremitie with her ten childrein, so as they have beene forced this lang tyme bygane to live by borrowing moneys frome honest persouns, who now despairing of payment will not faile to cast her in waird and thereby bring her to the extremest point of miserie." Both parties compearing personally and having been heard, the pursuer nominated Sir John Murray of Ravilrig, and the defender nominated Thomas Inglis of Eastshield, to whom they submitted their differences in this matter, and who, they promised, would meet in Edinburgh on 10th January next to consider them; and in case of variance they promised to consent that the Lords of Privy Council or Session should choose an oversman, to whose decision they would submit themselves.

Marion Mure, widow of George Brown in Leith, in presence of himself, the bailies of Leith and Mr. William Struthers, minister at Edinburgh, has confessed that for many years past she has been a witch, and that at the persuasion of the Devil she renounced her baptism and took the name of Katharine from him. The supplicant had earnestly dealt with the said bailies to apprehend her and imprison her in their tolbooth to await her trial, but they refuse to do so without a warrant from their Lordships; and this accordingly he craves. Supplication by Elspet Lindsey, widow of David Ramsay, Collector-depute of the Taxations granted to his Majesty in 1630 within the north side of the sheriffdom of Forfar, and James Ramsay of Ogill, cautioner for the said David, for his interest, as follows:—The said David in the discharge of his said office had uplifted about 315 merks 10s. as his accounts show, and he had this money upon him when he happened "unhappilie to be drowned in the Water of Southesk and throw the violence and spait of water caried down be the space of foure myles or thereby over the rockes and linnes, the hail cloaths being upon his bodie for the most part not onelie torne and rent, bot also the hail parts of his bodie pitifullie mangled and spoyled," and the whole money foresaid lost to the utter ruin of her and her fatherless children. She made known the case to the Lord Chancellor, as Collector General of the said taxation, who, commiserating her case, issued a warrant discharging the Sheriff of Forfar and his deutes from troubling her or her cautioners on this account until further instructions should be given, and she now craves that their Lordships would grant her their discharge for the money lost as above-mentioned. This the Lords do by discharging the said Sheriff and his deutes from troubling the said widow or cautioner, and by ordaining the Lord Chancellor to allow the said sum of 315 merks 10s. to the said Sheriff of Forfar and his deutes in their accounts of the taxation.

Complaint by John Balfour, mariner, indweller in Leith, and others against John Stevenson and William Weir, merchant burgesses of Edinburgh, who accused the complainers of stealing their goods, and are summoning the said complainers to a diet which they are prevented from keeping by their ordinary business.

Complaint by John Balfour, mariner, indweller in Leith and James Broun, timberman there, with William Waters and John Borthuick, merchants, burgesses of Edinburgh, their cautioners, as follows:— John Stevinsoun and William Weir, merchants, burgesses of Edinburgh, accused the two principals, Balfour and Brown, of stealing some goods belonging to them out of the ship called "The Johne" of which Thomas Wilsoun, skipper in Leith, is master, and charged them to find caution to undergo their trial before the Justice in the tolbooth of Edinburgh on 18th January instant. Conscious of their innocency, they found the caution as required and are quite willing to stand their trial; but when charged the said John Balfour was, as he still is, in Burdeaux as a sailor in a Leith ship called "The Lamb," of which John Glas, skipper in Leith, is master, and the said James Broun was just about to sail thither as a sailor in the ship called "The James," of which Peter Logie in Queensferrie is master. As their ships are still at Burdeaulx they cannot keep the said diet. Charge having been given to the said John Stevinsoun, who compeared by John Pitcarne, his procurator, and the said cautioners appearing for themselves and their principals, the Lords after hearing parties ordain the Justice, Justice Clerk and their deputes to postpone the said trial until 8th March next or sooner upon a warning of six days if the accused persons come home before then. Supplication by John Meldrum that he and his wife, both prisoners in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh and in heavy sickness, may have the privilege of having their chamber door left open for the admission of free air.

Supplication by John Meldrum, as follows:—He was warded in the tolbooth of Edinburgh fourteen months ago by their Lordships, and he has been kept there "in closse waird within twa lockefast doores" with "twa wounds rinnin on his bodie and others sickenesses and diseases. And now it hes pleased God to visite him with ane deidlie fluxe quhairf within thir foure dayes he is in worse cais and no lyfe looked for him. Lykeas his poore wife hes beene ever in closse waird with him since the first day of August last, who hes lyke wayes contracted anie heavie sicknesse and lyes bedfast, and neither of thame is able to releeve nor helpe another." He therefore craves their Lordships' warrant to the provost and bailies of Edinburgh and the keeper of their tolbooth to suffer his chamber door to stand open so that he may have free air at doors and windows. The Lords being truly informed of the truth of what is here represented, grant warrant as craved, provided that "the doore of the turnepyke quhilk closes both chambers be alwayes kept fast;" and to give access to the ministers of Edinburgh for conference with the supplicant and ministering comfort to him in his weak condition; and they likewise ordain that his wife shall have permission to go out and in to the tolbooth as she may think fit "for the benefit of the free air."

Complaint by Sir Thomas Hope of Craighall, King's Advocate, and James Maxwell of Threemerkland, constable of the Threave and Steward-depute of Kirkcudbright, as follows:—The said steward-depute has lately been charged by Patrick McClellane, messenger, to apprehend John Riddick of Dalbetie in terms of letters of caption raised at the

against the magistrates of Kirkcudbright for refusing to ward a rebel presented by the complainer.

instance of John, Agnes, and Rosina Riddick, lawful children of James Riddick of Grange, and James Bryssoun, now spouse to the said Agnes, and the complainer, out of a desire to do the duty of his place, required the messenger to show him where the rebel was and to concur with him in his apprehension, which he very undutifully refused to do. Notwithstanding thereof the complainer went and with great trouble apprehended the said rebel and brought him on 22nd August last, the second day after he was charged, to William Foullertoun, provost of Kirkcudbright, and after showing him the charge for apprehending the said rebel, desired him to place the prisoner in the tolbooth of Kirkcudbright, as being the head burgh of the said stewardry, and the ordinary jail thereof. To this the said provost seemed to agree; and yet out of his affection for the prisoner he earnestlie suggested that the matter might be drawn to an agreement. For this effect Marion M^cNaught, spouse to the said provost, as taking burden for John M^cNaught, indweller in Edinburgh, at whose instance the letters were executed, consented to take the said steward-depute's bond that he would agree with his party before 1st November next under the penalty of 400 merks, and the said provost undertook to relieve the said steward-depute at the hand of the messenger. But, as it appears, they only wished to draw the complainer under the said rebel's debt, they shortly afterwards resiled from that agreement, looking that he would suffer the rebel to escape. The complainer was accordingly forced to bring the rebel about 8 o'clock at night to the said provost's dwelling house to be entered by him in ward; but the provost absented himself and his wife took instruments that it was under night, when no magistrate was bound to receive rebels. The complainer took with the rebuff, but gave notice to the provost to be ready in the morning with the bailies to take the said rebel off his hands. Accordingly in the morning he sent Thomas M^cClellane of Colline, another steward-depute, to desire the provost to do his duty; but the provost refused, declaring that he would rather incur the danger of the sum and the censure of the Council than commit the said rebel. Thereupon the complainer went with the rebel to the provost's dwelling house, but the provost absented himself. He then took him to the dwelling houses of John Ewart and William M^cIlmichen, bailies of the said burgh, who also absented themselves and refused to receive the rebel. The complainer was then forced to carry him through the town to the tolbooth himself to deliver him to the jailer there; but the jailer at the direction of the said magistrates locked the jail and went away taking the keys with him; whereupon the complainer committed the rebel "within the turnpyke yett of the tolbuith, made the utter yett fast upon him," and then coming to the Cross of Kirkcudbright, made public intimation of his diligence in the premises. Notwithstanding hereof the said magistrates suffered the said rebel to escape. Afterwards, on the complainer learning that the said rebel was making out of the country, on 25th August he followed after him for 24 miles a whole night, and apprehending him at the farthest part of the stewartry, brought him upon the 26th to the said William M^cIlmichen and desired him to commit him. This he "verie prouddie refused, lap on horseback and raid away." Then he took him in turn to the dwelling houses of the provost and each of the bailies, who every one absented himself; and afterwards to the jailer, who acted as on the former occasion. Whereupon the complainer repeated his imprisonment of the rebel within the turnpike gate, and made intimation as before at the market cross; and that the said magistrates might not pretend ignorance of the warding of the said rebel, he left his servants there in charge of him for three hours; notwithstanding whereof the saids magistrates suffered him to escape. Though the complainer has thus done his duty in the matter, the messenger who first refused his concurrence to him has now denounced him rebel for not apprehending the said John Riddick. Charge having been given to the said William Foullertoun, John Ewart, William M^cIlmichen, and Patrick M^cClellane, and pursuer and defenders compearing, the Lords, in respect that there is no riot or violence libelled, remit the complaint to the Lords of Council and Session as the competent judges in such a case, and ordain the pursuer to pay the witnesses produced, every horseman £10 and every footman £4, with this declaration that if he prevail in the case before the said Lords of Session he will have repetition of these expenses from the defenders.

Complaint by William Kirk of Blairhill and Margaret Donaldsoun, Complaint by William Kirk of Blairhill and Margaret Donaldson, his spouse, against James Crawford for assault.
 his spouse, as follows:—On 21st July last James Crawford at the Mill of Muckart came to their lands in Blairhill and in a most lawless way "kuist fowseis and stanks upon the saids lands, and when as the said William reproved him he cruellie invadit and persewed him of his lyfe with swords and others weapouns, hurt and woundit him thairwith on the armes and legs, stogged him in the bellie, kuist him to the ground, cruellie birsed and bruised him in diverse parts of his bodie, band his hands behind his backe with his awne hors helter, kuist him in the said stanke bound hand and foote and left him lying there in a great tempest of wind and weit to the hazard of his lyfe. And upon the morne thereafter the said James come to the compleaners said spous, cruellie hurt and woundit her with his falded neiffes, kuist her in the said water and stanke where she lay a long tyme in the perrell of her life, and shortlie thereafter parted with barne." The pursuers and defenders compearing personally and probation being referred to the defender's oath of verity, who deponed negative, the Lords assoilzie him.

sented not to trouble her for it till then. Yet on 20th instant he dealt with William Dick, bailie, and by wrong information moved him to commit her to ward until she should find caution according to law ; and since being in ward she has further been arrested there by Barbara Purves, widow of Alexander Broun, Henderson, Lady Boghall,

Leslie, her spouse, and David Thomesoun, indweller in Edinburgh, all without any process of horning or caption or decreet or sentence against her. Charge having been given to John Smith, one of the bailies of Edinburgh, for himself and in name of the provost and remanent bailies, to produce the complainer, and to the said James Dalgleische,

Leslie for himself and his spouse, and Barbara Purves, and all parties compearing, the pursuer produced the discharge granted to her by the said James Dalgleische bearing a continuation of 400 merks of principal and 40 merks of annual rent till Whitsunday next, which the Lords having seen and considered, and having heard parties, they find that the pursuer was unlawfully apprehended at the instance of the said James Dalgleische, and they therefore ordain the provost and bailies of Edinburgh to put her to liberty notwithstanding of the other arrestments made upon her while in ward, which they declare to be invalid.

Complaint by James Wright in Norieston and Helen Calder, his mother, against James Norie of that ilk and Alexander Norie, his son, for assault and hamesucken. Charge found unproven, and James Wright committed to the Tolbooth of the Canongate.

Complaint by James Wright in Norestoun and Helen Calder, his mother, as follows:—On , 1628, James Norie of that ilk, and Alexander Norie, his son, came to the said Helen's kiln, where she was "keeping and attending her malt and without anie offence done be her to thame and attending her malt and without anie offence done be her to thame patt violent hands in her persoun, hurt and woundit her to the effusioun of her blood, band her as ane theefe with thair garters, tooke away all her malt and left her bound, as said is. Lykeas about the same tyme the saids persouns come be way of hamesuckin to the said James Wrights dwelling hous, brake the doores thair of up, tooke him furth perforce, hurt and woundit him in diverse parts of his bodie to the great effusioun of his blood, band him with bow strings and cords, and brought him as ane theefe with thame to the tolbuith of the Cannogait where they kepted him in great miserie 18 weekes." Charge was given to the said James and Alexander Norie, and in the letters it was provided "that if the compleaners prove not this complaint aganis the said Alexander Norie that in that cause they sall be exemplarlie punished in persouns and goods to the terrour of others." James Wright, compear- ing for himself and his mother, and the said Alexander Norie being also personally present, and probation being referred to the defender's oath of verity, who denied the charge, the Lords assoilzie him therefrom. And because the pursuer "has maliciouslie persewed the defender upon this complaint and succumbed in proving thair of," the Lords, in terms of the provision foresaid, ordain him to be committed to ward within the tolbooth of the Cannogait and remain therein upon his own charges until they release him.

which she has been frequently heard by their Lordships, they ordained "the said Robert to receive the compleaner in his companie and to permitt her to cohabite with him, as also they moved him to perfyte, subscriye and delyver to the compleaner ane contract of all and sindrie his lands, heritage, tacks, steidings, annualrents and soumes of money undisponed and dilapidat to her in conjunct fee and lyverent and to the childrein procreat betuix thame heretable." But in contempt of their Lordships he left her and her poor family and went off to England with one Jean Ker, a daughter of the deceased Andrew Ker of Gredden, taking with him all the goods and gear he could have at that time, and there he remained with her "in the filthie cryme of adulterie all the last harvest." At the end of harvest the complainer went to England, "brought the said Jeane Ker furth thair of to the presbyterie of Middelbie, presented her before the brethrein of the same, and out of her affectioun to her said husband offered to forgive him all his bygane offences, provyding he would remaine at home with her and his childrein; nevertheles he hes left the compleaner and aucht childrein, quhair of foure are so young and weake that they cannot putt on thair cloathes, and since Martimes last they have had nothing bot what they have begged frome thair freinds; and in the meane tyme he interteanes the said Jeane in ane oastlerhous with all things necessar untill she be delyvered of her childe to him." When she raised inhibitioun against him upon the foresaid contract, he, to baulk this, sold the whole plenishing of his house, with his corn, horse, cattle, and sheep, locked up his house, cast forth the complainer and their children without allowing them clothes or any kind of furniture, and caused his creditors arrest all that remained undisposed of, with right to pursue for such sums as were due by him to her. He has by these means amassed about 3000 merks, with which, when the said Jean is delivered of her child, he intends going to England, and living there with her in adultery. She and her children will thus be brought to beggary. Charge having been given to the said Robert Scot, who did not compear, and the pursuer compearing and having been heard, together with the evidence of several witnesses, the Lords find "that the said defender hes behaved himselfe verie undewtfullie to his said spous, hes removed himselfe from hir companie and hes kepted companie with the said Jean Ker, who hes borne ane barne to him," and ordain him to be charged to enter into ward within the tolbooth of Edinburgh on six days, and there remain until order be taken with him in this matter, upon pane of rebellion; and they ordain his Majesty's Advocate to pursue him criminally before the Justice for his adultery.

Complaint by Alexander, Master of Forbes, against William Forbes of Tolquhoun, whom he accuses of refusing to restore to him a coffer containing his writs which had been entrusted to the said William.

Complaint by Alexander, Master of Forbes, Colonel, as follows:—About eighteen months ago he went to Germanie to serve under the King of Sweden, leaving a coffer containing his principal writs in the keeping of William Forbes of Tolquhoun, who thereupon placed the same in the house of Tolquhoun, and the complainer gave the key of the said coffer to Sir George Johnestoun of Caskieben, so that these persons to whom he had entrusted his estate and living in his absence might have access to the said writs and use the same in defending him in any actions raised against him during his absence. He has now returned home to settle his affairs and must make use of his said writs and others concerning him for his Majesty's service; but while the Laird of Caskieben has delivered up the key of his said coffer, William Forbes “his undewtifull and unkynde kinsman” will on no wise deliver up his coffer; and by this means not only is his credite brought into question, but he has been reduced to great loss and expense for want of his writs, and he “is like to suffer infinitelie in his estait” unless a remedy be provided. Charge having been given to the said William Forbes of Tolquhoun, and the pursuer appearing by William Dick, merchant burges of Edinburgh, his procurator, and the defender personally compearing and having been heard, the Lords command the defender to produce the said coffer and writs therein before their Lordships upon the last Council day of March next.

until lately that Hew, Master of Lovat, pretending some right to them, endeavoured by “way of deid, bangsterie and oppresiou to debarre and seclude the compleaner thairfra and to appropriat the same to himselfe.”
Accompanied by Donald Fraser in Kinmyleis and others, to the number of twenty persons, armed with swords, darlochs and other weapons, he came on 1st December last to the said lands, violently broke up the doors of the houses of the complainer’s servants, John Dollas and Complaint by George Ker of Newhall, servitor to the Earl of Roxburgh, against John and Robert Ker in Duddingston, his creditors, for illegal warding.

Complaint by George Ker of Newhall, servitor to the Earl of Roxburgh, as follows:—He is due certain sums to John and Robert Ker in Duddingston, and being willing to satisfy their claims had several meetings with them at their desire. At one of these at Fala they, with mutual consent, nominated the Laird of Duddingston to deal for them, and the complainer nominated Mr. William Bennett, parson of Ancrum, to deal for him, who were to meet in the matter on the last day of February in the Earl of Roxburgh's chamber in Edinburgh. Accordingly the complainer caused the said Mr. William come to Edinburgh that day and wrote to his said creditors to keep the diet, when they replied that they would do so "about foure houres" and promising him assurance. After long conference his creditors departed, and he expected that they would have dealt uprightly with him in terms of their assurance under the hand of the said Robert Ker; but instead of this "they most fraudulentlie and treacherouslie circumveened him in so far as all the tyme of the treatie they had ane messenger with some of the town officers waiting at the staire foote who, how soone the compleaner come down, seized upon his persoun at thair command and directioun, and harled him to the tolbuith of Edinburgh, where he yitt is for the present." The pursuer compear- ing by James Steill, his procurator, who produced a letter written by the said Robert Ker to the said George of the tenor libelled, and the defenders being personally present and acknowledging the letter, and Fol. 336, b. further consenting to the said George obtaining his freedom, the Lords find that the said George Ker has been unlawfully taken under trust, and command the provost and bailies of Edinburgh to liberate him in so far as he is warded at the instance of the defenders.

in Kynnaltie, were put to the horne at the instance of the complainers for not paying the teind sheaves of their lands. Against these persons they have used all legal process, but can by no means prevail, and so the complainers are frustrated of the provision and maintenance due by the foundation of their College from the said persons, and are constrained to use their own means. They will be forced to leave their places and services in that College, and it is scarcely probable that any will be found to undertake the same without hope of maintenance and means to live there, unless the Lords of Council provide a remedy against those persons who dwell at peace in the country and uplift the rents to their own use. Complaint by John Hamiltoun of Stainhous, and William Hamiltoun, notary, his son, as follows:—They have good and undoubted right to the Mill of Staikfurde with "the unfree and astricted multures thair of dammes, water gangs, parts and pendicles of the same," whither the "hail oastlers and others changers and inhabitants of the toun of Dumfries wer in use to come for grinding of thair malt, meale, peis and uther stuffe thir yeeres bygane," and these persons are under agreement with the complainers so to do, as they have done so long and are still willing to do. But lately James Maxwell, messenger, Adam Sturgeon of Troqueir, Thomas Maxwell, bailie of Dumfries, and James Newell, smith there, at the command and direction of the provost and bailies of Dumfries, have begun maliciously to trouble the said persons who come to the complainers' mill, threatening them with all manner of violence if they go to it with their stuff, and for this effect the said provost and bailies in October, 1631, by proclamation at their market cross and by tuck of drum throughout their whole town, discharged all their inhabitants, free and unfree, from taking their stuff to the said mill under a penalty of £10 for the first fault, £20 for the second, and so on, doubling the same toties quoties. Also on _____ when John Blacklock in Dumfries, who is one of the persons under the said agreement, was coming with his servants to the said mill with a load of malt, the said James Newell and Robert Maissoun, his servant, apprehended "the honest man and his hors with the malt and forced thame to goe to ane mylne callit the Bedmill where they kepted and deteanned him ane long space." Further, after the foresaid unlawfull discharge by tuck of drum, the persons foresaid directed a number of their inhabitants with horses to the complainers' said mill to surprise the same and carry away certain malt belonging to several inhabitants of Dumfries which was there to be ground for their use. By these oppressions the said mill is like to become unprofitable to the complainers, and their agreement foresaid nullified, to their heavy hurt and prejudice. Charge

Complaint by James Mitchelhill, indweller in Selkirk, as follows:— Their Lordships, in June last, with consent of his creditors, released him from ward in the tolbooth of Selkirk, where he had so long been warded by his brother William, upon assignations taken by him from his other creditors and comprising of his lands. The complainer has since entered upon a fair course for his brother's satisfaction, to whom he is due but 5000 merks. His brother gave him five years to pay this sum, and he has already paid 3000 merks. But because his said brother has the intromission with the complainer's estate, which is of the value of 10,000 or 12,000 merks, and will neither buy the farms and houses himself nor

Charge having been given to the said William Mitchelhill, and both he and the pursuer compearing, the Lords, after hearing parties, remit and recommend to the magistrates and council of the burgh of Selkirk to make choice of some "indifferent" men to take trial of the accounts between the two brothers and compose their differences, wherein, if they fail, they are to report the occasion thereof to their Lordships upon the first Council day of June.

Complaint by Jean Dow, widow of Mr. Ludovick Stewart, against Robert Stewart, brother of the said Ludovick, for hamesucken, illegal warding, and theft of writs pertaining to the complainer.

Complaint by Jean Dow, widow of Mr. Ludovick Stewart, as follows:—On September, 1627, or thereabout, Robert Stewart, brother of the said Mr. Ludovick, came with several accomplices, by way of hamesucken, to her dwelling-house in Linlithgow, "patt violent hands in her persoun, caried her to the tolbuith, deteanned her prisouner there be the space of aucht dayes as if she had beene some odious malefactour, not suffering anie to have accesse to her till she delyvered to the said Robert all her husbands evidents, writts and securiteis, with certane bands made be her said umquhill husband to his creditours, quhilks he had satisfied and wer in his keeping the tyme of his deceasse, as namelie, ane band of ane thowsand merkes made be her said husband to Thomas Edward, burges of Linlithgow, quhairunto the said Robert hes tane assignatioun and thereupon hes recovered decreit aganis the compleaners twa daughters as airis to her said umquhill husband. Both parties compearing, and they and certain witnesses having been heard, the Lords assoilzie the defender, as nothing has been proved by them against him.

Complaint by John Ross in Crichton of Lumphannan against Robert Carnegie in Wester Kincardine for assault.

Complaint by John Ros in Craigtoun of Lumphannand, as follows:—In November 1624 Robert Carnegy in Wester Kincardin having slain Alexander Ros in Kincragie was criminally pursued therefor by the gentlemen of the name of Ros. For this cause alone he conceived a deadly hatred against them and the complainer among the rest, and he and Alexander Duncan, his servant, on 3rd October last lay in wait for the complainer between Murealehous and Kincardin to take his life, fiercely assailed him on the highway and gave him a number of strokes upon the head and body with a baton, and then drawing their swords and dirks would have despatched him if some people near by had not interveened, whereat with many execrable oaths they threatened to take the complainer's life. The pursuer and the said Robert Carnegie compearing personally, the former declared that he passed from his complaint against Carnegy, and the said Alexander Duncan not compearing, the Lords ordain him to be put to the horn and escheat.

Complaint by Mr. George Leslie at Birsackmylne and James Arbuthnet in Kinmundie, as follows:—They are informed that Andrew Forbes at the Mill of Clinterlie, with concurrence of his Majesty's Advocate, had obtained a decret from their Lordships for denouncing them rebels for not appearing on 23rd February last to answer to their complaint against them, whereas they were never lawfully charged nor competent time given them to compear in regard of the unseasonableness of the weather. Further, the said James Arbuthnet came, immediately after the rising of the Council, for the purpose of clearing himself; and they have found caution in £100 to compear this day; in respect whereof the said horning should be suspended. Parties being called and the said Mr. George Leslie compearing personally, and the said Andrew Forbes by Mr. James Kennedie, servitor to Mr. James Baird, Advocate, his procurator, and the case having been gone into (ante p. 434), the said procurator referred the truth of the complaint to the oath of the said Mr. George Leslie, who deponing negatively, the Lords assoilzie him. They find, however, that the letters of horning against James Arbuthnot [sic], are orderly proceeded, and ordain them to be put to further execution, and in respect of his non-compearance they Supplication by James Lumsden in Mordington, as follows:—Upon his Majesty's letter to their Lordships for granting the supplicant a protection in order that he might in safety proceed with a complaint he has given in against Sir James Dowglas of Mordington, they granted him till the 29th instant, so that he might compare this day and enact himself to pursue the complaint foresaid. This he is now ready to do. As, however, the complaint concerns not himself only, but also his brother, and Elspet Ramsay, his mother, he craves that their Lordships would include them in the protection to be granted to him. The Lords grant their warrant to these three persons until 15th April next, because the supplicant has enacted himself to appear before them on 13th April next and insist in his said complaint, and also not to bear any weapons, under the penalty of 500 merks.

Complaint by John Stewart, brother to the Earl of Galloway, as follows:—Alexander Cunninghame of Powtoun is due to him several sums of money of which he hoped either to have received payment, or to be secured of, when he consented to his obtaining their Lordships' protection until 15th March instant. For this end he attended and awaited upon the said Alexander but has been totally disappointed. He understands that he has obtained a prorogation of his protection from their Lordships until 15th April next upon the narrative that he is taking order with his creditors, which he has no purpose or intention of doing, but only seeks it for his own private ends. Charge having been given to the said Alexander Cunninghame, and he and the pursuer comparing and having been heard, the Lords discharge the protection granted to Cunninghame so far as concerns the pursuer and ordains the same to be of no force after Thursday next, the 29th instant, at night.

He accordingly craves their Lordships' protection. This the Lords grant till Friday next at night, the 30th instant.

Supplication by Andrew Dicksoun, master shipwright to his Majesty, as follows:—Their Lordships' protection granted to him until his Majesty's Treasurer should make payment to him of his disbursements in his Majesty's service expires on the 31st instant, and seeing that if he were paid he could satisfy all his creditors and have something over, and that as yet the Treasurer has paid him nothing, he craves a continuance of his protection. Complaint by Mary Macfarlane in Dumbarton against John Porter in Dumbarton, the Provost of the said burgh and others for seizing property which belonged to the complainer and for illegal warding.

Complaint by Mary Macfarlane in Dumbartane, as follows:—The late John Elder in Dumbartane, her uncle, "a little before his death, being fyve score yeeres or thereby, having desired the complainer to attend him in his sickenesse, he shortlie thereafter dispouned be legacie to her all that he had, as the testament in the hands of Walter Watsoun, notar, beiris; and he gave to her the keyes of the utter doore of his hous. Bot how soone he died Johne Porter in Dumbartane, Coline Elder at the Kirk of Lus, James Hall, provest of Dumbartane, and Thomas Fallowsdail there come to the compleaners said uncles loodging, violentlie brake up the doores thairof and kists within the same and possess the said Johne Porter with the haill goods and geir being therein; and becaus the compleaner would not renunce her part of the legacie for twentie pundis the said provest committed her to waird in thair tolbuith and deteanned her in great miserie be the space of twelffe weekes, she being his Majesteis free subject, and they dealt with the said Walter Watsoun to keepe up the legacie frome her so as by no meanes she can gett the same frome him to confirme it, quherby they intend to wrack and undoe the poore simple woman, who hes no meanes to live upon, bot is now forced to goe up and doun the countrie in the qualitie of a begger." Charge having been given to the said James Hall, John Porter, Thomas Fallowsdail, and Walter Watsoun, and the pursuer compearing and also the said defenders, except Fallowsdail, and they and certain witnesses having been heard, the Lords assoilzie them as nothing was proved against them. But because it is evident to their Lordships that the pursuer has maliciously troubled the defenders and a great number of witnesses, who had come to depone in the matter, without any just ground of complaint, they allow the provost and bailies of Dumbartane to apprehend her when she comes to Dumbartane, commit her to ward for such a time as they think meet and thereafter scourge her through their town. Complaint by the wrights of the Canongate against the wrights of the burgh of Edinburgh.

Complaint by Henry Edingtoun, deacon of the wrights of the Cannogait, and James Grahame, David Russell, John Henrie, William Dureward, Alexander Torrie and William Hunter, also wrights there, for themselves, and in name of the whole body of their craft, as follows:—"After manie oppressiouns committed be the wrights of Edinburgh upon thame and thair servants in making and selling of thair worke upon the ordinarie mercat dayes within the burgh of Edinburgh and upon anie worke day within thair awne liberteis to anie persouns willing to buy the same, contrarie to the laudable and uncontrolled custome observed be thame in this caise past memorie of man," they complained to their Lordships in the year 1604, and obtained a decret against the wrights of Edinburgh and their deacon ordaining them to desist "fra making of anie stoppe, trouble or impediment to the supplicants in presenting their worke to the mercat of Edinburgh and selling the same upon the ordinarie mercat dayes, and fra troubling them in working outwith the fredome of the burgh of Edinburgh to anie inhabitant thair of who pleased to employ thame, and in bringing the worke so wrought be thame and setting up the same to the awners thair of at all tymes when the occasioun presents," as the said act in their Lordships' books shows. They looked "that thair ancient libertie and priviledge" thus strengthened would not be further quarrelled, yet in contempt of their Lordships' said decret, the deacon and wrights of Edinburgh have troubled and oppressed them since that date, as the following particulars show. On May, 1623, James Dennistoun, then deacon of the wrights of Edinburgh, accompanied by several of his brethren and others, took from some of the complainers' craft and their servants, viz., from James Grahame "ane coffine or dead kist made be him to ane barne of Archibald Naper," gentleman; and from David Russell, on October, 1624, "ane kist" made by him for the deceased John Dick, son of the deceased Walter Dick, writer; further on William Stewart, officer to the said wrights of Edinburgh, and others at their command took from John Henrie "ane kist" made by him, which he was carrying to the house of Mr. John Sandilands, advocate; on John Franke, then deacon of the said wrights, and several of his accomplices, took from the said William Durward "ane kist" made by him for the deceased William Campbell, tailor; on the said James Dennistoun and others violently "reft frome the said Alexander Torrie ane kist" made by him for a servant of the deceased Agnes Stirline, mother of Mr. James Raith of Edmistoun; and now lately on 1st February last John Young, Andrew Haistie, John Haitlie, Thomas Henrie, and Alexander Baxter, wrights in Edinburgh, and others "violentlie tooke from the said William Hunter ane kist of aik" made by him for the deceased Isobel Spinke, widow of Captain Hunter, which he could only redeem from them by consigning five dollars in the hands of Alexander Cleghorne, their deacon, which they still retain. All these articles were wrought by the said persouns within their own booths. These oppressions will continue and increase, as it is threatened they will, if the Lords do not, by the punishment of these transgressors of their act, and the securing of the complainers in the peaceful exercise of their privileges, provide a remedy. Charge having been given to the said Alexander Cleghorne, Thomas Henrie, John Haitly, John Franke, James Dennistoun, Alexander Baxter, and Andrew Haistie, and the pursuers compearing personally, accompanied by James Aittoun and Henry Bannatyne, bailies of the Cannogait, who concurred with them in this complaint; Mr. David Prymrois, advocate, compearing as procurator for Robert, Earl of Roxburgh, for his interest as baron of the regality of Broughtoun; and the said Alexander Cleghorne, John

Franke, James Dennistoun, Alexander Baxter, and Andrew Haistie also <sup>Decreta,

They adduced also two instances of decisions given by their Lordships in similar actions between the craftsmen of Edinburgh and the Cannogait, one on 8th February, 1616, when George Lathreis, servitor to George Torrie, "glassinwright in the Cannogait," summoned the bailies of Edinburgh for illegally apprehending and warding him because he had brought in to the said burgh, set up and mended some glass windows there, but whom their Lordships assoilzied and put the complainer and his master under caution to abstain from the like in future under a penalty of £20 toties quoties. The other case was on 13th March 1610, when the weavers of the Cannogait brought an action similar to the present against the "wobsters" of Edinburgh, which their Lordships remitted to the consideration and decision of the Lords of Session as the judges competent thereto. Moreover, the defenders urged, "the bringing in of coffines and dead kists frome the Cannogait to the burgh of Edinburgh must be interpret to be ane direct working within the said burgh of Edinburgh, quhilk priviledge no unfreman can lawfullie challenge, becaus the maker of the coffine must take the lenth and breadth of the corps for whome it is made, he must call the nailes, dresse, calfat and perfyte the coffine after it is brought in, quhilk is a direct working." It was replied to this by the pursuers and Mr. David Prymrois that this action is proper only to their Lordships' judgment because of the violence libelled by the pursuers against the defenders of "ane violent oppositioun made to thame to discharge a commoun dewtie of thair calling to the dead, and by the violent taking ^{Fol. 347, b.} of thair coffines and moneyes frome thame without calling of thame to thair answeare and without decreit and sentence givin aganis thame." Further, the said burgh of the Cannogait is the burgh of regality, and the pursuers again oppose their Lordships' decret of 2d February 1604 to the pleadings of the defenders. To which it was answered by the defenders that this decret cannot militate against the provost and bailies of Edinburgh, who alone have power within their own jurisdiction to put the Act of Parliament referred to to execution; and, moreover, in the said decret it is provided that it will always be without prejudice to the magistrates of the burgh of Edinburgh and others having power to stop and debar all unfreemen to do any work within their said burgh as accords of the law. They therefore adhere to their former desire that this matter be referred to the Lords of Council and Session. The Lords, having heard parties, find and declare "That the wrights of the Cannogait may worke and make coffines and dead kists to anie gentlemen within the burgh of Edinburgh for the tyme and to others not being burgesses of the said burgh and to bring in the same to be delyvered to the parteis whome they concerne at all occasiouns aff the mercat dayes; and finds and declares that the saids wrights of the Cannogait may not make and bring in to the said burgh anie coffines or dead kists to be delyvered to anie burges of the said burgh to the use of thame and thair famileis bot upon the ordinar mercat dayes; and thairfoir finds and declares that the saids defenders hes done wrong in taking of the kists foresaids quhilks wer made to others nor to burgesses and decernis thame to delyver backe agane to the saids persewers the saids dead kists togidder with the fyve dollors abonewrittin."

Complaint by Francis Durhame of Duntarvie, as follows:—On 9th March instant, David Dundas, portioner of Philpstoun, having at his own hand tilled a part of the common muir of Abercorne to the prejudice of the Earl of Abercorne and other gentlemen around, of whome the complainer is one, who have the benefit of the said commonty, the complainer went to the said muir to understand the true state of the case, whereupon "the said David Dundas first disgracefullie upbraidit the compleaner, calling him false dyver theefe, speired at him how he durst come upon that feild and then ranne in upon him with ane drawin whinger of purpose to have slaine him therewith." When the complainer, for avoiding further danger, went to his horse with Mr. James Quhytheid, his nephew, Mungo Gilbert, servant to the said David, by his instructions followed him, and with a drawn sword "gave him ane cruell wound upon the head after he wes halfe ane myle aff the bounds foressaids, out of quhilk wound there wes bones takin be Johne Ker, chirurgiane; and the said David and his said servant with sevintene men in armes with drawin swords in thair hands so hardlie persewed the compleaner that he wes forced to quite his cloake and his nephew his hat, and so with difficultie to escape; and ever since they have sought for the compleaner with fourtie or fiftie men in armes at his hous of Duntarvie and other parts where he haunts of purpose to have slaine him." Charge having been given to the said David Dundas, and he and the pursuer both compearing, and the pursuer for probation referring the verity of Counter-complaint by David Dundas against Francis Durham of Duntarvie and Mr. James Whitehead, younger of Kincaill Park, for assault.

Counter-complaint by the said David Dundas as follows:—Francis Durhame of Duntarvie and Mr. James Quhytheid, younger of Kincaill Park, having causelessly conceived a deadly hatred against him, without manifesting the same by word or writ to the complainer, resolved to take some "unhonest advantage of him" whenever occasion should offer. Accordingly on 9th March instant they came to the dwelling house of Bessie Gardner, tenant of Philip Quhytheid, which is in sight of the complainer's dwelling house, and lay concealed there for a good part of that day, with their spies abroad upon the fields. About five o'clock in the afternoon the complainer came forth "to oversee his husbandrie, having onelie his joope and gloves upon him and ane whinger," and their spies having advertised them thereof, they came to him, he being upon his own ground, within a pair of butts of his own house. As the said Francis had a blew bonnet on his head and his cloak cast about his mouth, the complainer did not recognise them until they were "hard upon him, and with the first salutatioun the said Francis upbraided the compleaner with disgracefull and reproachefull speeches and cruellie persewed him of his lyfe; and the said M^r James, secunding the said Francis, gave the compleaner ane great straike with the sword upon the head to the great effusioun of his blood, and the said Francis gave him another straike on the right hand to the amputatioun of the little finger thairof, and than thinking the compleaner had been assuredlie slaine, the one says to the other, 'Lett us goe, he hes gottin enough,' and so tooke thair hors and raid away." Pursuer and defenders both compearing, and probation being referred to the oaths of the defenders, Francis Durhame Fol. 349, a. confessed that he invaded and hurt and wounded the pursuer, for which the Lords ordain him to be warded within the tolbooth of Edinburgh, there to remain upon his own expenses until they release him, "lykeas he wes delyvered to Androw Quhyte, keeper of the tolbuith of Edinburgh, to be convoyed be him to his said waird." Mr. James Quhytheid, denying upon oath the complaint against him, is assoilzied by the Lords.

In the action and complaint by David Dundas, son of John Dundas of Newlistoun, against Francis Durhame of Duntarvie and Mr. James Quhytheid, younger of Parke, "the said Francis being interrogat and demanded anent certane particulars concerning the said complaint he grantit and confest the having and shooting of ane pistolet at the said David Dundas at the tyme of the invasioun foresaid, quhairupon M^r David Heriot, advocat, as procurator for the said David Dundas, asked instruments."

Both parties compearing, and they and several witnesses having been heard, as nothing was proved by them against the defender, the Lords assolzie the defender.

Complaint by Alexander, Earl of Linlithgow, and John Areskine of Balgownie, as follows:—In September last when the said John was the Earl of Linlithgow and John Erskine of Balgownie against James Wingate, a deprived messenger, for an illegal process against the said John Erskine. dwelling in the place of the Throsk he was sent for by the Earl of Mar, then resident in Alloway. From him he received a commission to go to the Earl of Linlithgow, who was then living in Airth, to intreat him to take some good course for settling the differences between the Laird of Buchannan and his lady. Accordingly on September he went to Airth and gave this message to the Earl of Linlithgow, and found with him the Laird of Buchannan accompanied by five or six horsemen and four or five footmen. As he was conferring with the Earl upon this matter one James Wingzets, a deprived messenger, charged the complainer, as sheriff depute of Stirlin for the time, by virtue of letters of caption raised at the instance of Robert Wallace, Writer to the Signet, to apprehend the said Laird of Buchannan, and because he did not do so the party has raised an action against him before the Lords of Council and Session for payment of the sum contained in the said letters. The charge foresaid could not have been executed at the time and place mentioned seeing the complainer was there only in the capacity of a private man, having no person with him, and being without weapons, having only a horse wand in his hand, while the said Laird was accompanied by ten or twelve men on foot and horse. Besides, the place and town of Airth is not within the bounds of his office, but is a regality by itself in which the sheriff and his deputes have no jurisdiction; and he had no jail in these parts to which he could have committed the said Laird; nor had he any authority to crave the concurrence of the inhabitants there. The said deprived messenger has thus very far abused the place and charge he formerly had as messenger, and though he had been a lawful messenger he had no warrant to charge any magistrate to apprehend the said Laird while he was in the house and company of a nobleman, "who be the dignitie and priviledge of thair place ar free frome suche charges; at the least suche respect sould be caried unto thame as no suche charge sould be execute in anie of thair houses and in thair awne presence." Moreover, no charge of that kind could have been lawfully executed but only against the bailie of that regality. The said pretended messenger ought therefore "to be exemplarlie punished for this proud and malapert presumptioun in using of this unlawfull charge, to the terrour of others to committ the lyke heerafter." Charge having been given to the said James Wingzet and Robert Wallace, the pursuers compeared, and also the said Robert Wallace, who declared that he gave no warrant to the said messenger to execute the said letters, and neither knew of their being raised or their execution, but that his name was only borrowed to the bond upon which the letters were raised by William Cuninghame, tutor of . Cuninghame also being present and examined confessed that the moneys contained in the band were his, that he had only borrowed the name of Robert Wallace, and that he gave the letters to the officer for execution as he should find the occasion ; but as the charge given to the said John Areskine of Balgownie was unlawfully given in the manner foresaid he passed judicially from the said charge and declared John Areskine free thereof and of all danger which might accrue therefrom, upon which the said John asked instruments. The said James Wingzet not compearing the Lords ordain him to be put to the horn and escheat.

James
Lumsden of the Templeland in Mordingtonhead, his mother and brother, against Sir
James Douglas of Mordington for carrying prohibited weapons, for assault, and for injury done to the com-plainers' lands
and goods.

Complaint by Sir Thomas Hope of Craighall, knight baronet, his Majesty's Advocate, and James Lumisden, heritable proprietor of the Templeland in Mordingtounheid, Elspet Ramsay, his mother, liferenter thereof, and John Lumsden, his brother, as follows:—Notwithstanding the frequent prohibition of the bearing of hagbuts and pistols, on September 1628 Sir James Douglas of Mordingtoun, accompanied by John Toshe, Patrick Torrie, William Andersoun, John Simsoun, Archibald Wilsoun, Arthur Wedderlie, Robert Speir, John and Adam Turnbull, sons of Adam Turnbull in Lintles, Peter Turnbull in Cuikisfeild, Alexander Lawder, John Gordoun, and Alexander Torrie in Mordingtoun, and Carlill, servitor to the said Sir James, with others of the lieges to the number of , armed with swords, staves, hagbuts and pistols, and other weapons, came to the complainers' lands of Mordingtoun where they “wer winning and shealing thair cornes, threatned and minassed thame of thair lyfes, and the said Sir James himselve persewed the said Johne Lumisden with ane hacquebut from Mordingtoun to Petigarloch, within the bounds of Bervick, where he crullie hurt and woundit the poore man and had not failed to have slaine him if he had not bene rescued frome his hands. And immediatelie thereafter the said Sir James returned backe and with ane great battoun strake the said Elspitt Ramsay, ane aged woman of fourscore yeeres, in diverse parts of her bodie, to the effusion of her blood in great quantitie, and brake twa sinewes in her right hand.” Again, in March 1629, the said Sir James, accompanied as above, came to the foresaid lands and cruelly and unmercifully assailed the complainers, “brake the said Johne Lumisdens shoulder blade in twa, hurt, birsed and bruised Margaret Craw, spous to the said James, she being great with childe, quhair of she parted to the hazard of her life, and woundit the said Elspitt Ramsay at that tyme lyke-

ways to the effusion of her blood." Then, shortly afterwards, Sir James, accompanied as above, came to the complainers' said lands after they had sowed them with their own corns, and unlawfully tilled the same and possessed himself thereof, and in the following harvest, "shoore, intronnetted with and caried away the haille cornes" thereupon, the said James being at the time in his Majesty's service at the Rotchell, in consequence of which his brother and mother and their poore families were forced to beg. Ever since then Sir James has pastured sixty nolt, sixteen horses, and eighty sheep upon the complainers' lands. Further, in April 1631, Sir James, accompanied as above, came to the said lands, "violently demolished thair dwelling houses being upon the same, kuist forth thair goods and geir being therein; and when as the said James Lumisden had begged ane little hutt for himself, his mother and childrene to keepe thame from stormes of weather, the said Sir James and his complices rugged the hous doun to the ground and had almost smored thame and three young children." Now, lately, in February, Sir James and his accomplices came and took the march stones out of the complainers' lands and carried them to Mordingtoun, where he is to build a house. Moreover, at their Lordships' direction in last the complainer renounced to the said Sir James the two merk land which lies runrig with the lands of Templeland and Butterdene, but Sir James, not content therewith, came on accompanied by Cockeburne, sheriff depute of Berwick, and took possession not only of the renounced lands but also of the complainers' other three lands, violently intruding himself therein when he could not get access by law. The complainer has accordingly been reduced to extreme misery and beggary, and, in addition, Sir James has precluded the defender from taking legal redress by putting him to the horn. All this course of conduct being expressly against "his Majesties lawes and Acts of Parliament, to the undoing of the compleaners, simple poore creatures, his Majestie has willed the Lords of Privie Counsell to take speciall notice and tryell [thereof] and accordinglie to censure and punish the delinquents." Charge having been given to the said Sir James Dowglas, Alexander Lawder, John Gordoun, James Carlill, Patrick Torrie, Archibald Wilsoun, Antoun Wedderlie, Robert Speir, William Andersoun, Alexander Torrie, and John and Peter Turnbull, and the pursuers appearing personally, and of the defenders, Sir James Dowglas for himself and Alexander Lawder, his servant, also Patrick and Alexander Torrie and John and Peter Turnbull, and parties and witnesses having been heard, the Lords assoilzie Sir James from the first, second, third, and fourth articles of the above complaint, of which the first and second were referred to his oath of verity and he thereupon sware negative, and the third and fourth to the evidence of witnesses who failed to substantiate them. Further, the Lords remit all points to the decision of the Lords of Counsell and Session; and because the complainer, James Lumisden, has very maliciously calumniated the said Sir James to his Majesty, "and hes fasched his Majestie without compleaning to his Majesteis Counsell and craving of justice aganis the said Sir James before thame, thairfoir and to the intent others may be affrayed to importune and fasche his Majestie heerafter with suche false reports and calumneis without first compleaning to his Majesteis Counsell, the said Lords ordains the said James to be committed to waird within the tolbuith of the Cannogait, therein to remain upon his awne expenses ay and quhill he be fred and releved be the saids Lords."

Complaint by Robert Preston of Craigmillar against John Vernour of Auchendinnie for convocation of the lieges, carrying of prohibited weapons, and violently taking possession of lands belonging to the complainer.

Complaint by Sir Thomas Hope of Craighall, King's Advocate, and Robert Prestoun of Craigmillar, as follows :—The bearing of unlawful weapons and convocation of the lieges in arins has been often prohibited. Now the said Lord of Craigmillar, having obtained a decreet of removal from the Lords of Counsell and Session against John Vernour of Achindynnie for removal from his lands of Nether Achindynnie, which are a part of the complainer's barony of Prestoun and Gourtown, enforced the same by letters of horning, of which Vernour purchased a suspension, and this being discussed, the complainer's horning was found orderly and ordained to be executed. Letters of ejection were accordingly raised and charge given to the Laird of Corstorphine, as sheriff-principal of Edinburgh, to enforce the same and place the complainer in possession of his said lands. This the said Sheriff did upon 20th March last, as an instrument taken thereupon bears. The complainer then learned that Vernour was meditating some violent revenge and so put him to lawburrows, hoping thus to prevent his lawless designs and secure himself. But upon 6th April instant Vernour assembled together some twenty-four persons, armed with swords, steelbonnets, hagbuts, pistols and other weapons, among them being George Vernour, apparent of Achindynnie, James Vernour, his brother, William Scot in Lowstoun, John Purdie in Auchindynnie, Gilbert Pennycuik there, Patrick Broun in Grayknow, and James Thomson there, and came with them to the said lands, "entered plewes upon the same and sew and harrowed a pairt thairof." The complainer, getting notice of this, endeavoured in a legal way to make interruption to their proceedings by sending some of his servants in peaceable manner to do so, when the said John Vernour and his associates "boasted and minassed" them, and attacked several of them, viz., "Johne Thomesoun who wes sawing, dang him to the ground, and gave him manie blae straiques, reft the scheit frome his neck, and rave the same, violentlie continewed in the teilling, harrowing and sawing of the saids lands," and would have killed some of the servants if the minister of the parish had not come and stopped them. Charge having been given to the persons named, and the pursuers appearing but the defenders not, the Lords ordain them to be put to the horn and escheat.

Complaint by Janet Love, wife of James Galbraith in Grenock, and the said James for his interest, as follows:—A person lately burned for witchcraft “under the vehemencie of the tortour for her ease and releeffe, delated the said Jonnet and diverse others honest and famous persouns as guiltie of that cryme,” and Mr. William Cochrane, sheriff-depute of Renfrew, merely upon this deposition, apprehended her and kept her prisoner with himself for a time, and then “sent her to Mr Johne Hamiltoun, minister at Innerkip, who instead of powerfull exhortatiouns, prayers, and other meanes of that kynde dew to be performed be persouns of his calling, cruellie caused tortour the complainer with bow strings, stob her with preins, lay her in the stockes, call wedges on her schinnes and otherwayes most miserable intreate her, thinking thereby to extort frome her by tortour that quhair of she is most innocent.” To prove her innocency she is most willing to stand her trial before his Majesty’s Justice and his deputes, the said sheriff-depute being altogether a partial judge to her in this matter. Parties being called and the pursuer compearing by William Playfair, her procurator, and Mr. William Cochrane appearing for himself and the said Mr. John Hamilton, and having been heard, the Lords continue the case till 5th June next, and ordain the said sheriff-depute to put the pursuer to liberty, as Robert Sempill of Noblestoun has become cautioner for her in 500 merks that she will appear before their Lordships on the said day and insist in this complaint.

Complaint by Janet Love, wife of James Galbraith, against the Sheriff-depute of Renfrew and the minister of Inverkip, the first of whom she accuses of illegally warding her on a charge of witchcraft, and the second of putting her to the torture.

Complaint by Helen Widdrow, widow of John Henderson in Barphillan, as follows:—About seven weeks ago Mr. William Cochrane, sheriff-depute of Renfrew, came under cloud and silence of night to her house in Barphillan, and entering therein put violent hands upon her, “medled with the keyes of her kists,” and carried her as a prisoner to the house of Robert Sempill of Noblestoun, where she has since been kept captive, she being his Majesty’s free liege and no charge being preferred against her. Charge having been given to the said sheriff-depute and Robert Sempill, and they compearing and producing the complainer in terms of their charge, the said Robert Sempill protested that he had satisfied the obligations of his bond of cautionry in producing the complainer, which the Lords admitted. Parties having been heard, the Lords ordain the said Robert Sempill to carry the pursuer back to Glasgow and deliver her to James, Archbishop of Glasgow, whom they request and desire to examine her, peruse the depositions and charges that shall be given in against her, and report his opinion upon them and their relevancy on the first Council day of June next. And the Lords take Robert Sempill bound under a penalty of 500 merks to convey the said Helen Widdrow to the said Archbishop, and to produce her before the Lords on six days’ warning.

Complaint by Helen Widdrow, widow of John Henderson in Barfillan, against Mr. William Cochrane, Sheriff-depute of Renfrew, for illegally invading her house and placing her in ward.

Supplication by Patrick Fleeming in Carbraine, Patrick Fleeming in Balloch, Malcolm Fleeming in Cardrone, William Fleeming in Persieland, and John Fleeming, bailie of Biggar, as follows:—They are heavily distressed as cautioners for John Fleeming of Carwod by his creditors who, though they have received (after submission to the Lords of Session), a disposition from the said John of his whole estate and living for payment of his debts, yet very rigorously press the supplicants by captions and otherwise, in consequence of which they are not only personally injured, but the affairs of their master, the Earl of Wigton, are like to miscarry, as all of them are either domestics, bailies or chamberlains to him. They therefore crave their Lordships' protection for a time. The Lords grant them this till Lambmesse next, but only against any of the Laird of Carwod's debts.

This day Michael Scot in Leslie, Marion Scot in Plesance, and John Turnebull, her husband, compeared before the Lords and gave in the copy of letters which had been raised against them at the instance of John Aitkine, younger of Rescobie, charging them with forgery of a summons under his Majesty's signet, by which he had been charged at their instance and at the instance of his Majesty's Advocate for breaking an arrestment and the taking of 100 merks of composition from him to pass from the complaint, and they protested that as the said John Aitkine had not compeared to insist, and as they were present and ready to answer, nothing should proceed in that cause until they had been summoned of new, and their expenses paid; which protestation the Lords allow.

Complaint by the musicians of his Majesty's Chapel Royal against Edward Kellie, one of their number, whom they accuse of illegally appropriating the rents of the said chapel.

Complaint by the musicians of his Majesty's Chapel Royal, as follows:—Edward Kellie, one of their number, has privily stolen a signature through the privy seal, dated at Whitehall, 28th November, 1629, without the consent of the dean and chapter, whereby he takes power to uplift the chapel rents, ordinary and extraordinary, although the complainers are provided thereto by gifts under the privy seal, and have been for many years past in possession of the same. He intends to serve inhibitions and arrestments upon the complainers' duties, lift them from his Majesty's Exchequer and dispone upon them at pleasure "to the ranversing of the ancient foundatioun of the said chappell and the compleaners great hurt and prejudice." Charge having been given to the said Edward Kellie, who compeared, and the complainers appearing by Andrew Sinclair and Alexander Hay, one of the musicians, the Lords, after hearing parties, "discharges the said defender of all raising of anie

April 1632.

Supplication by Edward Kellie, as follows:—There was a precept by the Bishop of Dunkeld, Dean of his Majesty's Chapel Royal, dated 7th March, 1627, for deprivation of the prebendaries, on which account and in order that none but qualified persons should have place in the chapel, his Majesty wrote to the said Bishop that his object was to remove the "insufficient" and replace them with "sufficient" persons. At this time Robert Winrame and William Scot were "deprived from the place of chantour and the supplicant be tryell was admitted to the same," and has the gift thereof from his Majesty, dated 17th March, 1628. Further, on 18th February, 1629, he obtained from his Majesty, with consent of the Lords of Exchequer, a signature for augmenting the rents of the chapel out of his Majesty's Exchequer "till the foundatioun thairof was established, three thowsand merkes per annum," and he has also "ane power past the privie seale with consent of the said Bishop for uplifting and ingaddinger all the fees, dewteis and casualiteis perteaning to the said chappell, as alsua to receive the foresaid interim of three thowsand merkes, and to establishe suche order therein with his consent as nane sould serve bot qualified persouns, and suche being established in place, to avoide contentioun sould be made alike in fee, nane to have more than another, bot that these who have most of the rents and benefices sould have lesse of the interim, and that these who have least of the rents and benefices sould have most thairof." The signature was passed on 28th November, 1629, and afterwards he received Articles written and subscribed by the said Bishop on 10th April, 1630, ordaining him "to take band of musicians to attend the said service," which he accordingly did on 22nd April, 1630, in which the order of the said chapel is subscribed by them. These and many other things the supplicant has done towards establishing order and competent musicians, also providing music for them, and he desires their Lordships to examine his signature in which "they will find the ratifeing of his former powers to be the farthest of his presumption," and that he infringes no man's rights, save that persons who are incompetent may be deprived, and those who are admitted shall be tried and examined first as to their competency, and not come in as formerly by paying certain sums of money. He is bound to his Majesty for the performance of his duty, and craves that he may have the benefit of his Majesty's letter and commands. As at Court M^r George Fletcher and James Philpe were appointed to compare his former warrant with his present signature before his Majesty granted it, so he craves that their Lordships would appoint some to re-examine and compare it with his former gift and powers, and also that they may examine his accounts and discharges, and so provide that the musicians may not suffer for what the supplicant has received, which is only what was justly due to him. The Lords appoint John, Lord Stewart of Tracquair, Deputy Treasurer, Sir John Hamiltoun of Magdalens, Clerk of Register, and Sir Thomas Hope of Craighall, knight baronet, his Majesty's Advocate, to peruse and consider the said signature and report thereon to their Lordships on the first Council day of July next, ordaining that the same be open for inspection by all parties concerned so that they may lodge their objections on that day; and they take the said Edward Kellie bound upon his faith and credit to appear that day, and that meanwhile he will not meddle in any matter concerning the Chapel Royal, nor make any remonstrance nor report to his Majesty as to the behaviour of any Councillor in the matter of the said signature.

Statement of grievances by the Synod of Aberdeen against excommunicated Papists who have returned from exile without sufficient warrant.

"The quhilk day in presence of the Lords of Privie Counsell compeired personallie M^r Williame Guild, commissioner frome the diocie of Aberdein, and gave in to the saids Lords the greevances of the Synodall Assemblie of the said diocie subscryved with his hand, of the quhilks the tennour follows:— Fol. 136, b.

The Greevance of the Synodall Assemblie of Aberdein by thair commissioner to the Lords of his Majesteis most honourabill Privie Counsell.

It is greevouslie regraited that when the Churche hes used the censure of excommunicatioun, and upon it horning aganis obstinat papists, and implored and obteaned the auctoritie of his Majesteis Counsell so farre as the lawes of the kingdome doeth permitt, yit these obstinat papists for eluding both of Churche and Counsell makes a cullour of removing furth of the realme, and after they have remained sometyme furth thair of they upon false narratives supplicats his Majestie and obteanes licences to returne for a certane space, during whiche tyme those of thair profession ar greatlie thereby encouraged upon expectation of finding the like libertie to returne to the countrie when they sall be reduced to the lyke extremitie as thameselfes hes beene; whair of the diocesan churche of Aberdene hes found the proffe in the persons of Thomas Menzeis of Balgownie, Patrik Con of Artrochie and Robert Irwing, burges of Aberdein, who pretends the having of a constant warrand for his brother, M^r Alexander Irwing, Thomas Menzeis and himselfe of remaining and resorting from tyme to tyme to the countrie continuallie.

The evils whiche have followed upon the returne of excommunicat papists within the countrie.

1. A number of his Majesteis subjects who wer at the point of giving obedience to the Churche before thair returne ar now become so obstinat that they will abide the last dint of excommunicatioun and after that horning and thereafter the auctoritie of the Counsell and after that banishment, expecting after it (whiche is the last) the lyke favour of returne.

2. These who returne come not alone bot under their cullour lyke-ways Jesuits and seminarie preists repaires frequentlie to the countrie, and going about to the houses of simple ones perverts thame; so that now more Jesuits and seminarie preists ar observed to have resorted thither within this short tyme nor of before, as the severall acts of thair conviction aganis thair ressetters exhibite at this tyme to your lordships hes givin sufficient prooffe.

3. The hands and hearts of pastors ar mucche discouraged and weakenned when they find all thair travellis and labours for purging the land of idolatrie to be frustrat when after three or foure yeares processe aganis papists before excommunicatioun and a long tyme after before his Majesteis Counsell for urging the executioun of the lawes thereupoun all resolves in banishment and the banishment in a licence to returne, and the licence to returne in an increase of obstinacie.

And seing the remedie heirof stands in the sole and soverane power and pleasure of his sacred Majestie who, upon the knowledge of such heavie prejudices whiche arises by granting licences, may be pleased ather to recáll or restraine and refuse thame altogidder, or before the granting of suche to referre the tryell of the pretendit causes to your lordships and to heare the bishop of the diocie or commissioner of the Church thereanent before the granting thairof, thairfoir humbelie supplicats your lordships to send up this our greevance to his sacred Majestie that his Hienes, zealouslie considering heirof may doe heerin as sall seeme best to his royall pleasure. Subscribitur, W^m Guild, commissioner.

Quhilks greevances being heard and considerit be the saids Lords and they advised therewith, the saids Lords ordains the same to be sent up to his Majestie, togidder with ane missive, of the quhilk the tennour followes:—Most sacred Soverane,—This day compeired before us ane commissioner from the diocesan assemblie of Aberdene and exhibite unto us certane greevances of the said assemblie concerning the proud contempt of some obstinat excommunicat papists who being denounced your Majesteis rebellis and removed out of the kingdome for that caus, have procured licences to returne for a short space, wherein they ar alledged to live more scandalouslie than before, and the said commissioners humble desire wes that we would send up the saids greevances to your most sacred Majestie. We having heard and considerit thair petitioun and desire in this point have thought it our dewtie to send up the saids greevances to your Majestie, and will humbelie intreate your Majestie after consideratioun thairof to returne unto us the significatioun of your royall will and pleasure thereanent. And so praying God to blesse your Majestie with a long and happie raigne, we rest, Halyrud-

“ Forsameekle as upon the nynteenth day of Julij instant Francis Steuart, sone to the lait Erle of Bothuell, compeirand personallie before the Lords of Privie Counsell, referred to the oath of veritie of Walter, Erle of Buccleuche, the tacke dewteis payable to the said Erle with the gressomes received by him furth of the kirks of Hauche, Aldhamstockes, Morhame, Crichtoun, Quhitsome, Wiltoun, Carruther, Galry, Bothuell, Hawick, Wolstoun, and Dolphinstoun with the prebendareis and chaplanreis belonging thereto, whair of the said Erle hes the patronage in the right of the forefaltour, and this present day being assigned to him for that effect, the said Erle, compeirand personallie this day before the saids Lords, gave in his declaratioun in writt, of the whilk the tennour followes :—Answers be the Erle of Buccleuche to the clame givin in be Francis Steuart anent the patronage of the kirks whilk the said Erle hes be the forefaltour of umquhill Francis Steuart, lait Erle of Bothuell, and of the commoditie that the Erle of Buccleuche or his father hes had by them since the forefaltour. Imprimis, To the kirk of Hauche, whilk is commounlie callit the kirk of Prestoun, the Erle of Buccleuche nor his father never had commoditie thair of, and all that they hed wes onelie the power to present ane person minister thereto. Lykeas this Erle of Buccleuche presentit M^r James Dalyell, now minister thereat. Item, as to the kirk callit Aldhamstockes, Repeats ut supra, and that the Erle of Buccleuche hes presented one callit M^r Johne Patersone. Item. Repeats the lyke for the kirk of Morhame, whairunto the Erle of Buccleuche hes presented M^r Thomas Turnebull, persoun and minister thereat. It is trew that umquhill Daniel Wallace, who wes last minister thereat, gave certane tacks to Francis Steuart or ane or others in his name of the teinds thair of, whilks he and they hes bruiked and as yitt possesses. Item. The provestrie of Crichtoun wes provydit be the last Lord of Buccleuche to umquhill Sir Gedeoun Murray of Elibanke, knight, last provest thereat, who in his lyfetye sett als manie tackes of the said provestrie with consent of the patron as might subsist and stand be law in favours of Williame Murrey, his brother, whilks tacks sensyne be the platt ar prorogat for the space of ane hundreth yeeres longer, and the dewtie the tacks extends to, three hundreth merkes yeerlie ; and since his decease presentit Johne Scot, his brother naturall thereto. Item. Repeats the lyke for the kirk of Quhitsome, and that the last Lord of Buccleuche presentit M^r Alexander Kinneir, last minister thereat, without anie gratitude or good deid, and hes onelie right to the presentatioun thereof. Item. The kirk of Wiltoun is takin by the Erle of Buccleuches father as vaikand in his Hienes hand by the forefaltour of umquhill Francis, sometyme Erle of Bothuell, nottheless it is trew and of veritie that the Erle of Buccleuche and his predecessours hes right to the said your consideratioun, as lykewayes anie other that sall be made by Johne Achesone, generall of our Mynte there, having callit for thame for that effect, and after that yow have seriouslie considerit of thame that so soone as convenientlie yow can yow certifie us of your opinioun what yow thinke best to be done heerin, that we may heerafter take suche a course thereanent for the good of our kingdome. And so we bid yow fareweill. Frome our Court at Greenewiche, the sixth of Junij, 1632.

"The whilk day the missive letter underwrittin togidder with some overtures for reforming the abuse of the coyne wer presented to the Lords of Secreit Counsell and read in thair audience, of the quhilks the tennour followes:—CHARLES R. Right trusty and right weilbelovit cousine and counsellour, right trustie and weilbelovit cousines and counsellours, right trustie and weilbelovit counsellours, and trustie and weilbelovit counsellours, we greit yow weil. Having considered the great prejudice that we receive in our dominiouns by the abuse of the coyne, the best of our gold and silver being exported to forrane natiouns and ane base sort of money imported in place thereof, we have the more willinglie hearkned to suche propositions as wer made for remedie of the same that we may heereafter with your advice and with advice of our Counsell heere resolve what course is best to be takin for reforming the present abuses and preventing the lyke heerafter. Our pleasure is that yow take the propositioun whiche we send yow heerewith into Letter from his Majesty anent the coinage.

Proposal made to his Majesty by John Acheson, General of the Mint, for remedying the state of the coinage.

“ May it please your sacred Majestie—To take into your consideratioun the great abuse occasiouned in your kingdome of Scotland by the course of diverse forrayne coynes, especiallie ane great number of all kynds of dollers of the imperiall coynes and others, which being imported by the cunning and covetousnesse of privat men, ar vented at ane higher rate (by ten in the hundreth) then your Majesteis awne coynes, and so draw all your owne coynes out of the kingdome to the unsupportable losse of your faithfull subjects and immeasurable gayne of strangers, who make thair payment in these baser sorts of money for suche commoditeis as they buy (not being able to live without thame) and export yeerelie out of your Majesteis kingdome of Scotland. For redresse of which abuses and releefe of your Majesteis faithfull subjects and to the end the saids forraine coynes may be with als little losse as may be drawin out of thair hands and yitt not exported out of the kingdome (whiche would infallible come to passe if these coynes wer cryed down and reduced to thair just value according to your Majesteis ordinances) it is humbelie propouned to your Majestie as the most expedient way that your Majestie would be pleased to have thame in your owne mynt converted into certane kynds of small coyne, whairof your subjects stands in neid, the fynnesse, weight and value whairof, als weill in worke as out of worke sall be after specified. And howsoever the best of the rex dollers being in weight and fynnesse according to your Majesteis ordinances worth no more bot 4s. 5d. sterline, nevertheles if it will please your Majestie for a certane tyme to remitt for the ease of the subjects and dispense with the right belonging to your Majestie upon the coynage the saids rex dollours may be takin frome the subjects and converted into the said small coyne at foure shillings aucht penneis sterline, and the other forraine coynes proportionallie to thair fynnesse, to witt, allowing for everie unce of silvir of 11d. fyne, 5s. 4d. sterline, whiche pryce the Maister of the Mynt must be obliged to pay to suche as bring in the saids forraine coynes of that fynnesse. And to the effect there may be no abuse in the exchange thereof bot that suche as bring thame in may be sure to receive thair trew value according to thair weight and fynesse, they may have libertie to stand by and see thame melted in the Mynt, and thereafter (according to the judgement whilk the ordinar officers sall make of thair value) receive frome the Maister of the Mynt thair just price at the rate of 5s. 4d. for the unce of silver 11d. fyne, which is at 4s. 8d. sterline for everie rex dollour. At whiche rate of 4s. 8d. it is not fitt that the rex doller sould have course bot onelie for the space of foure moneths after proclamatioun, and after that tyme during the space of six moneths longer to be receaved at the rate of foure shillings 6d.; whiche being lykewayes expired than to reduce thame to thair trew value of 4s. 5d. according to your Majesteis present standard, to run as bullioun for the ordinarie silver coynes in all tyme heerafter or at the least till suche tyme as your Majestie sall give order to the contrarie, if yow sould thinke fitt to raise the silver and make it in proportioun with the gold upon report of these commissioners whome your Majestie hes appointed (heere in England) to consider of the fitnessse of that mater. In the meane tyme for the reasons above named the said coynage of small money would not be differd.

"The small money to be coynned is after this proportion. The English pond weight consisting of 12 oz. at 11d. fyne to be worth in worke 3 li 6 s. sterline. Upon this price shall be coynned peeces of 4, 2 and 1d. of 10 penny fyne shorne at 60 shillings in the said pound weight, to witt, 180 foure penny peeces, 360 twa penney peeces and 720 pennie peeces in the said pund weight, with the ordinarie remedeis of two penney weight upon the fynnesse and of three foure penney peeces, whiche is 4 pennie weight upon the tale for remedie upon the pound weight the 2d. and 1d. proportionably. The merchants sall have for the unce of silver of 11d fyne 5s. 4d. sterline and at this rate the rex dollers sall be takin frome the subject at 4s. 8d. and others coynes proportionable to thair fynnesse. There will remaine upon everie pund weight of 10 dwt. fyne $21^d \frac{3}{4} \frac{1}{8}$ for the workmanship, waist in melting, fees, officers wages and others charges. It is to be considered that if the saids dollers wer to be reduced to the rate of 11d. fynnesse for the coynage of the saids small moneyes the charges in refynning would be too great and the losse of the subjects would be too muche and the sise of the peeces too small and not mainable for the use of the people. Besides the small coyne being a little lesse fyne than the great (and yitt not so muche as to make the excessive gayne to encourage to import and vent counterfoote in the kingdome) the difference in the fynness will be a meanes to keepe the said small coyne within the kingdome for the use of the subjects; and moreover in tyme comming there will be no want of forrane coyne at 10d. fyne at reasonable rates to serve for necessarie coynage of the said small money when it pleases your Majestie to give order for it. Quhilk missive and overtures being heard and considerit be the saids Lords, they ordaine copeis thair of to be delyvered to the provest and bailleis of Edinburgh and Maister of his Majesteis Cunzie-hous to be advised therewith till the first Counsell day of November nixtocome."

And whereas some mistaking might be apprehendit be his Majesteis subjects of his Majesteis gracious and royall intentioun anent the mater of the teinds, as if his Majestie intendit that everie heretour should leade his teinds without respect to the valuatiouns and in whois default the not valuatiouns hes proceedit, thairfoir the Lords of Secretit Counsell, for preventing of suche mistakings and for cleering of his Majesteis subjects of thair doubts in this point, hes thought meit heirby to signifie and declare that nane of his Majesteis subjects whatsomever ar warranted by his Majestie to leade thair teinds this present yeare bot suche as hes beene in use of leading thir diverse yeeres bygane and hes beene heard before the saids Commissioners and by thame hes beene allowed to doe the same. wer now prepared and ready to give an answeire to the article propouned unto thame anent the most fitt and commodious places for the planta-tioun, they declared that they could not give answer thereanent till first they understood what noblemen, barrouns, gentlemen and burrowes would joyne with them in the mater of the fishing, and the drift of thair answeire tended to this—That in all these places of the plantatioun there sould be ane reservatioun of the fishing to the natives allanerlie.
Bot they being with good reasoun put aff this point as ane article that his Majestie would not yeeld unto, they then be thair petitioun craved

“ And thairfoir by the said petition he, the said Captane Robertsoun, prayed for letters of reprisall aganis the citie of Hamborrow bot without having considerit that letters of reprisall wer not grantable bot upon the denyall or delay of justice when demanded and thairfoir at the said Captans humble sute we sent the said petition to your Majesteis Secretarie, the Lord Vicount Stirline, to be shewed to your Majestie and withall we wrote to your Majestie in November, 1628, in the behalfe of the said Captane and his caus and thereby humbelie prayed your Majestie to give notice to the said state of Hamborrow of the wrongs done to the said Captane and how that your Majestie being sensible thairof could not in honnour and justice deny unto him letters of reprisall incause they sould refuse or delay to make suche redresse and reparatioun as justice and equitie required.

“ After your Majestie had perused the said complaint and our said letter your Majestie first caused examine the prooffes and witnesses upon oath in your Majesteis High Court of Admiraltie in England and thereafter your Majestie sent over the saids depositions under the seale of the said Admiraltie to the Senate of Hamborrow with your Majesteis owne royall letters of the 11th of May, 1629, requiring the said Senate to make restitutioun and satisfacioun within one moneth after the receipt of your Majesteis saids letters whiche wer sollicitid by your Majesteis Ambassadour, Sir Robert Anstruther, knight, to whome your Majestie then wrote for that purpose, bot in lieu of satisfacioun the Senat and Magistrats of the said citie wrote backe thair excuse to your Majestie by thair letter of the dait the 29 of July, 1629, quhairin they signified to your Majestie that the said Alexander Longue was absent before the receipt of your Majesteis saids letters and that they had communicated your Majesteis saids letters and the saids depositions to the said Michael Utenhold quhairby he might answer for himselfe and his said absent partner, Alexander Longue, and with all they did send unto your Majestie the supplicatioun made unto thame by the said Michael Utenhold togidder with his reprobatorials made aganis the saids depositions of the witnesses of the said Captane Robertsoun ; as also they signified to your Majestie that they had thair jurisdictione frome the Emperour and wer governed by the Cæsarean lawes and thereby could not doe justice to the said Captane Robertsoun within so short a space as your Majestie desired bot promiseit to doe justice with all expeditioun whensoever the said Captane Robertsoun sould send a procuratorie to persew the partie. After your Majestie had perused the said answer and the said Utenholds supplicatioun and reprobatorials your Majestie did send the same to us with your Majesteis awne letter daited the 28 of December 1629, requyring us to grant letters of reprisall to the said Captane Robertsoun if it did appeare to us that justice had ather been denied unto him or delayed. Declaration by Mr. Nicolas Briot, chief graver of his Majesty's Mint in England, anent the reform of the abuse of foreign coin. “The whilk day in presence of the Lords of Secreit Counsell compeired personallie Nicolas Briot, cheefe graver of his Majesteis Mynt in England, and gave in the declaratioun underwritin subscryved with his hand, for the better understanding of the propositioun made be him for reforming the abuse of forrane coyne, of quhilk declaratioun the tennour followes:—

A Declaratioun made by Nicolas Briot to the honorable Lords of his Majesteis Privie Counsell haldin at Edinburgh upon Tuisday, the 4th day of December 1632, for the understanding of the propositioun made by him to the saids Lords at his Majesteis command tuicheing the expulsioun of forrane moneyes out of his Majesteis kingdome of Scotland.

That the said propositioun is made in favour and for the advantage of his Majesteis subjects it is evident, becaus by it no particular persoun can hope of anie profite or benefite for the present and also nothing reserved for the tyme to come, except the ordinarie right of his Majesteis officers fees and expences of workmanship, as may be easilie seen and considerit.

“That the diminutioun of the money from ellevin to ten deneirs fyne for the fynnesse of the small money cannot be callit abaseing thairof, becaus the price of gold and silver strickin in great peeces of money according to his Majesteis ordinance remaine in the intrinsecall goodnes, weight and price, as they ar at this present.

“As also by the said propositioun is not understood that greater quantitie sould be made of the small moneyes then that whiche sall be judged necessarie for the use and commoditie of the people and that within the tyme that sall be appointed.

“And incaise that the reasons more at length mentiouned in the propositioun made by the said Briot declaring the causes and reasons for whiche the small moneyes sould be made of the fynnesse of ten deneirs are not sufficient to make them be receaved, it sall be free for anie man to propound a better meane and to prove the same.

“That as the money of strangers hath beene brought in this kingdome by degrees and highted in thair price fra tyme to tyme, so this kingdome cannot be disburdened thereof bot by that same way, that is to say, by making lesse the price thairof also frome tyme to tyme, and that leasure may be givin to surrogat als good kynds of money of his Majesteis in in thair places; and so by these meanes the commerce and handling shall not be hindered nor changed.

“There is no reasoun to hight the price of silver within his Majesteis kingdome so long as France and Spaine keepes the last ordinances, and namelie to hight the said silver to suche ane excessive price as the dollers and others moneyes whiche have thair course in this kingdom may be converted in the standart money without tinsell and great losse.

“Lykewayes no remedie may be hoped for against this evill, nather anie good advice frome thame who are the causers of this disorder and speciallie frome thame who have seene the beginning thairof, to witt, the merchants and officiars of the Mynt and have not hindered the same according to the dewtie of thair offices, for the quhilk they have to answer.

“And thairfoir it must be resolved for the present to lose a little and the sooner the better without respect of anie particular persouns, and that so muche the rather that the delay in suche maters is of a dangerous consequent. The losse present is not considerable in respect of the great profite it will bring furth, altho the losse for the most part will fall upon the riche, who possesse the most part of forrane moneyes, and not upon the people who possesse the smallest part.

“It wer easie to bring manie exemples of crying doun sindrie sorts of moneyes made by nighbours of this kingdome both in tymes past and not long since, and particularlie in France when the warres and publict necessiteis required, the kings wer constrained for the weale of the estait to alter the money and hight the price of thair awne coyne, whiche necessitie of warres being past (without anie respect to the losse of the subject at that tyme bot considering onelie the tyme to come) have redacted and restored the moneyes to the prices they wer at before the warres; whiche may be seene in the historie of Charles 7th, who after his warres aganis England, when the peeces of 40 li. wer brought down to ane pund. Also Henrie the 3 in the tyme of the civill warres of the League, the moneyes being highted and forraine moneyes brought in by his ordinance in the yeere 1577, callit the Edict of Poitiers, he redacted the money to half price; so that that whiche gave that day 60s. the morne onelie wes worth 30s.; and the testan, which then wes worth 30s. wes redacted to 15s.; and all forraine moneyes cryed doun, and these that had course redacted to the same price, for whiche cause the king wes greatly praised and his ordinances found so just that they wer observed to the yeere 1602.

“This also may be seene in the moneyes of Germanie, since the battell of Prague, that the rix doller being highted to twentie florences the Imperiall Chamber ordained the yeere 1624 that the peeces having course for 20s. should be redacted to three shillings, and all other moneyes remitted to thair owne prices as we may see them presentlie. Acta, June 1632-June 1634.

 The like hath beene done within this ten yeeres past through the most part of Italie, by the King of Spaine in Millan, by the Duke of Savoy in Florence, Mantua and others. Fol. 169, b.

“It is to be observed and marked that the disorder of forrane moneyes in the kingdome hath beene made by certane particular persons who doe make thir profite and advantage by the hurt of the commonwealth, and by the introductioun of the saids moneyes they have not onelie transported the commoditeis of this kingdome bot lykewayes his Majesteis moneyes, and hath destitute and destituts daylie this kingdome of all the naturall money by thair unlawfull traffique, as if this kingdome wer a conquest kingdome, seing that he that is the soverane is not knowne by his proper, naturall and coynned money. And this disorder is the greater that it hath beene made and continueth without anie caus or publict necessitie.

“It is manifest thairfoir by the foresaids exemples and reasouns what is the wonderfull benignitie of his Majestie towards his subjects of Scotland to make thame to understand and communicat to thame that whiche his Majestie esteemes to be thair profite and for the conservatioun of the honnour and dignitie of this ancient crowne; and that so muche the more that as frome the exemple of other soverane kings his Majestie by the right of his royall prerogative hath power to impone the price of gold and silver that ar coynned and is not obliged to declare to his subjects the causes, motives and reasouns thairof. Sic subscribitur, BRIOT. 7. Supplication by George Ros, merchant burghess of Edinburgh, as follows:—In October, 1629, he went to England in the course of his wonted trade and purchased certain packs of cloth, of which, upon his way home, he sold two and a half in the burgh of Haddingtoun. The customs officers of Edinburgh sued him for the customs due upon these, but he suspended the process, lodging the sums claimed in the hands of Mr. John Skene, clerk to the Exchequer, until the matter should be legally discussed by the Lords of Exchequer, which has not yet been done. Nevertheless Patrick Baxter, one of the said officers, out of an extraordinary and causeless hatred against the pursuer, when he in October last had again returned from England, and sent his whole packs of cloth to be "customet," and had paid the duties, kept up and still detains from him ten sticks of cairsey worth £40 or £50 sterling, and so has spoiled his sale of the same. He craves that the said Patrick may be called to answer for this. On the back "Apud Halyrudhouse, xvj Novembris, 1630. Fiat ut petitur, Geo. Cancell., I. P. D." Also endorsement of execution by Mr. William Dowglas, macer, on 18th November, against the said Patrick Baxter, personally apprehended; witnesses, James Dowglas, macer, and Alexander Dowglas, son to Mr. William Dowglas, advocate. [Signed] "M. W. Dowglas, maissar." Also noted on the document "xviiij Novembris, 1630, pairtyis personalie; Remittis to the Exchekquer."

 Supplication by George Ros, merchant burghess of Edinburgh, that Patrick Baxter, one of the officers of customs of Edinburgh, may be called to answer for detaining certain goods of the supplicant.

8. Fragment of a petition by James [Crichtoun] of Fren draught and Dame Elizabeth Gordoun, his spouse, as follows:—Their Lordships know the malicious aspersions made by Margaret Wode against the said lady and others, the said lady being "a gentlewoman of good birth and qualitie," and the preservation of whose credit should be of weight with their lordships and "tenderlie handlit." She therefore humbly intreats that for her vindication and for cleering the truth of "that dark and hiddin misterye" their lordships would call the said Margaret Wode before them and examine her upon three short interrogatories which the supplicant would hand in. Likewise the said Laird of Fren draught intreats that their lordships would examine John Toshe, his late master of household, putting him to the torture if necessary, and allow the supplicant to be present and examine the said John Toshe, whose declaration so nearly concerns him.

15. Supplication by the provost and bailies of Edinburgh as follows :— Referring to the rescinding of the Decreet obtained by them from the Lords of Session against certain inhabitants of Leith (see ante, p. 598) they say, "We consaved that your lordships had rescinded and annullit the said totalie according to the directioun and meaneing of his Majesteis letter, bot we find be the extract offered unto us that it is onlie restrictit to three personis for debaring of thame frome girnelling of victuall whilk we tak to be far aganis your lordships meaneing, seeing thir three personis could never clame any forder privilege in Leethe nor any others of the inhabitantis thair of. And whereas this restrictioun of the said act leavis a dure oppin to bussie people to hald us in a continuall tormoyle and fashrie, quhair of your lordships hes had some prooffis thir yeiris bigane, and seeing we crave no thing bot with the reservatioun of our liberteis to live in peace and quietnes, our humble petitioun unto your lordships is, that your lordships wald rescind your lordships act foirsaid in the wholl without ony restrictioun conforme to his Majesteis directioun."

Supplication by James Home and others, on behalf of the town of Leith, anent the same.

16. Supplication by James Hoome, John Luikup, David Robertsoune, Mr. John Elphinstoune, Alexander Hay, David Jamesoune, James Johnstoune, John Smettoune and Henry Chrystie in Leith for themselves and on behalf of the town of Leith, as follows :—In March last, 1630, the town of Edinburgh obtained a decreet from the Lords of Session "working againes us, the hail liedges and publike good of this kingdome, cheiflie anent girnelling of victuall, baiking bread, buying and selling of forraine and cuntrey commoditeis as unfriemen and utheris thairin conteyned." The Lords of Council had cited the supplicants before them on 9th December last only to give account, as they believed, of their proceedings with Edinburgh, but at the instance of Edinburgh the Lords had required them instantly to give in reasons why their Lordships' act made anent girnelling of victuall should not be rescinded. Being unprepared, the supplicants could not so fully set forth their reasons as the great importance of the matter required. As the town of Edinburgh are proceeding by petitioning the Council and will also "by sinister informatioun" endeavour to obtain from his Majesty private warrants to the Council for rescinding of their said act they crave leave to present some few reasons "quhy your lordships act cannot be rescindit in no tyme comming butt stand in force for ever," which they pray that their lordships would read and consider and give command to their clerk that whenever there shall be a demand for the rescinding of the said act, he present and read this their humble supplication and reasons herewith produced, and warn them to compear for maintaining the same and adding thereto as may be necessary. Further, because the Lord Advocate is assessor and daily procurator for Edinburgh, and pleaded against the petitioners in this matter, and daily consults against them; and because Sir James Baillie of Lochend gives partial counsell, and solicited the Lords of Session for obtaining the said decret in favour of Edinburgh; and because Sir Archibald Achesone, his Majesty's Secretary, also gives partial counsell and consults against them, the petitioners crave that they may be declined and removed in all causes betwixt Edinburgh and them according to the laws of this kingdom.

" Ressones presented be the toun of Leith for thameselves and behalfe of the hail lidges and publique good of this kingdome to the Lordis of his Majesteis most honourabill Privie Counsell of this kingdome aganis the toun of Edinburghs petitoun anent the rescindinge of the Act of Secreitt Counsell given be the saidis Lordis againes the decreitt obteyned be the toun of Edinburgh before the Lordis of Sessioun in March, 1630.

c. January
1630.
Reasons presented by the town of Leith to the Council anent the same.

(1.) Your Lordships act being most maturlye and deliberatlye, as the said act beiris, and importinge intollerabill præjudice to the toun of Leith, hail estait of this kingdome, and the publique good thair of, and the toun of Edinburgh compeirand personallie be thair magistrates, as your Lordships can beir recoird, being dispute contentiouslye in your Lordships presence, cannot be rescindit, becaus the same was given in foro contradictorio, and that thair is nothing now proponed quhilk wes not ressoned befor.

The Council
cannot rescind
its own act
because it was given *in foro
contradictorio*.

(2.) It concernes your Lordships in honour and justice and as fatheris of the commounwealth under his Majestie to advert to the gritt præjudice in rescindinge thair of, and to maintaine that quich your Lordships hes done so advysedlye and honorablye, being of so gritt importance.

The rescinding of it would be of great præ-judice to the commonwealth.

(3.) The said act being so deliberatlye done be your Lordships, quho is intrusted be his Majestie to advert to the præjudice of the hail estait, aucht not to be rescindit be no law or ressonne or any privat warrand, gif any be procured or heirafter sall be procured fra his Majestie in the contrair for rescinding thair of, quhilk onlie can be done by sinister informatioun of the toun of Edinburgh quha is butt ane subject and pairtie againes the publique good of the hail kingdome, his Majestie never having hard the æquitie and importance of the said caus debaitted in his Majesteis royall presence be all pairties having entreis, and having doubtles, as we conceawe, committit the advancement of the publique good to your Lordships speciall and tender cair, and to resist the præjudice thair of intendit be any persoune or subject under quhatsomever prætext.

The act can be rescinded by no just law or reason.

(4.) Your Lordships act working in favoures of the nobilitie, gentrie, communalitie and Leith cannot be taken away brevi manu without lawfull citatioun to ane certane day to compeir befor your Lordships to heir and sie the same rescindit or giwe in ressonnes in the contrair, quich as extendis be the consequens againes all.

If the original act of Council be rescinded, the act rescinding it may be rescinded in turn.

(5.) Your Lordships act cannot be rescindit nather can any medium or suirtie be found to the liedges and publike good of this kingdome without ane declaratour againes Edinburgh decreitt and mainteaninge your Lordships act. For gif the said act sall be rescindit and Edinburgh only acted to use executioun be your Lordships advyise, it is impossible that be ane act they can be tyed be ressource all thair richtis, priviledges and decreittis ar conceiwed to proveist, baillies, counsall and communitie, quich all will not consent, nather can the consenter to the act be oblissed butt durante officio and not for his successoris and communitie, and so be dew cours of law will annull your Lordships act, as was cleirlye pleaded in your Lordships presence the last Counsall day be the magistrates and toun clerk of Edinburgh; lyk as they may waitt upon summe extraordinar tyme to tak advantage and gett the Lordis of Counsallis consent, and so your Lordships first and second act sall be utterlye extinct and the haill liedges undone; and so thair can be no suirtie gif your Lordships first act be altered or innovat be anie medium butt as it is first conceiwed.

The act cannot be rescinded because it would imply the ruin of many thousand true subjects.

(6.) The said act cannot be rescindit becaus the toun of Edinburgh intendis nothing butt the ruine and destructioun of many thowsand trew subjectis quha lives be such meane commoun cuntrey callinges as balking of bread, making of malt, aill and beer, toppinge, wentinge and sellinge the same, quho cannot haif the said priviledge except they buy wictuall and cannot buy wictuall except they be priviledgit to girnell the same for conservatioun to the maintenance and use of liedges and strangeris.

Since it is lawfull to buy and sell victual, it is lawfull also to store it.

(7.) It being lawfull be dyvers acts of Parliament to buy and sell wictuall, be consequens it is lafull to girnell and keip the same, as said is. Wictuall being corpus must be keiped and detined in ane plaice be the buyeris and selleris.

There could be no accomodation for strangers in Leith, if it were forbidden to store victual.

(8.) It is lafull be dyvers acts of Parliament that in all throche fairinge tounes thair be hoslaris, innes, furnitoure and intertainment for man and beast, butt so it is Leith being ane of the principall throche fairing tounes of this kingdome for liedges and forraine straingeris cannot haif the samyen except they be priviledgit to buy wictuall and haif girnellis and houses to keip the same for maintenance and intertainment as said is.

The families of many burghers in Leith would starve if they were not allowed to store victual.

(9.) The toun of Leith being ane of the grittest tounes of this kingdome not tollerate to use the trade and trafficque of burgesses, having na uther maintenance to maintaine thair wyfis, childrein and familie quich wald sterve gif they were debarred fra buying wictuall, balking bread, making malt, aill and beer, toppinge, wentinge and sellinge the same, quich they ar be consequens and revera, gif they be not priviledgit to girnell wictuall.

Miscellaneous
Papers.

(10.) The said act cannot be rescindit becaus the toun of Leith hes ever bein in peaceabill possessioun, sence ever it was a toun, to buy and sell wictuall and girnell the same, baik bread, mak malt, aill and beer, top, went and sell the same, and the pretendit warrand of this decreitt is ane alledgit strainge kynd of wreitt alledgit granted be ane of the Lairdis of Restalrig, not subscrivit be him, not having witnesses, conteynge no holding nor dewtie.

The act cannot be rescinded because Leith has always had the privilege of storing victual.

(11.) The said act cannot be rescindit becaus not only the toun of Leith hes ever bein in peaceabill possessioun heirtofoir, butt the same wes niver cravit or urged be Edinburgh sence the granting of the said pretendit warrand of the said decreitt, quhilk is abowe tua hundreth yeiris sence, and so being dead so long cannot now tak effect in præjudice of the toun of Leith, the hail stait and publique good of this kingdome.

The pretended warrant of Edinburgh against the storing of victual in Leith has been in desuetude for 200 years.

(12.) The said act cannot be rescindit becaus if we be not sufferit to girnell wictuall, baik bread, mak malt, aill, beer, use hoslarics, top, went, buy and sell the same per consequens we ar defrauded of buying of wictuall, becaus by and attour our sustenance we offer to prow we buy and wentis yeirlye within the said toun sex and fyftie thowsand bowis of wictuall, quhilk will infer not onlie ruine to us butt intollerabill præjudice to the nobilitie, gentrie and hail liedges of this kingdome, being defrauded of the seall of thair pryme commodities."

If Leith is forbidden to store victual, it will thus be prohibited from buying it.

(13.) The said act cannot be rescindit becaus gif Leith be dischairgit of girnelling, be consequens of buying, and so the pryme commoditie of wictuall sall be monopolized againes the lawes and publique good of this kingdome and the seall of all wictuall coft or sold in Leith to fywe or sax wictuall mongeris of Edinburgh, and so they sall inforce all men to sell at such cheape rates as they pleas and exact exorbitant pryces fra the buyers quhen they pleas and consequentlie mak ane artificiall dearth and cheapnes at thair pleasure, in regaird nain may girnell butt the wictuall mongeris of Edinburgh, and so consequentlie no buying to utheris allowit.

The result also would be that Edinburgh would have a monopoly and would create artificial prices.

(14.) The said act cannot be rescindit becaus the act of Parliament allows girnelling of wictuall except to ane dearth, quhilk act of Parliament is posterior to the servitude granted be the Laird of Restalrig to the toun of Edinburgh, and the commissioner of the toun of Edinburgh being ane voter in that parliament as in all uther parliaments, butt any restrictioun of the servitude grantit be the Laird of Restalrig to the toun of Edinburgh over the toun of Leith.

By act of Parliament the storing of victual is allowed except in times of dearth.

(15.) Gewand and no grantand the said act were rescindit the extensioun of thair decreitt cannot be extendit butt over thair awin wassalis, and the tuo pairt of the toun no being thair wassalis sould be exempted, quhilk is not now be thair decreitt obteyned befor the Lords of Sessioun recalled be your Lordships ordinance.

Edinburgh has the right only of preventing their own vassals from storing victual.

If Leith be prohibited from storing victual, Edinburgh would dictate its own prices to the nobility and gentry who have victual to sell.

(16.) Gif the said dischaarge of girnelling were allowit againes the toun of Leith the bringeris of wictuall to Leith, having no priviledge to girnell wictuall butt under the priviledge of Edinburgh, and the toun of Leith being forcit to imploy thair girnell houses to fyire houses and uther uses and the girnellis of Leith being in the handis of the toun of Edinburgh, they sould inforce the nobilite and gentry, be keiping up of thair girnellis, to sell thair wictuall as they pleas, at least be the paucitie of thair girnellis and dearth of thair weekelie pay for the same exhaust the haill benefeitt of thair pryme commoditie of wictuall.

Miscellaneous
Papers.

To prohibit Leith from storing victual would be to prohibit it from baking bread, which would be against all law and conscience.

(17.) As for the bairking of bread the said act must be sustained be the ressounes afoirsaid and be par ratio as in maiter of estait it is lafull to us to baik bread and sell alsweill as to mak malt, ail, beer and sell the same; and to dischaarge the bairking of bread in Leith to be sold for use of liedges and straingeris is againes all law, conscience, the law of natiounes, and is inhumanitie, the lyke practique quhair of is not in this kingdome, in regard that ewrie man of Leith is not abill to giwe meit for nocht, and to giwe all men quha neidis, nather can ewrie passenger, strainger or inhabitant, speciallie the poor that hes not to maintaine thair childreine and familie fast and want bread till they go to Edinburgh and buy it.

It is lawful for Leith to import foreign victual for its own use and to sell it to its own burgesses.

(18.) As for traddinge as unfriemen with forraine commodities it is lafull to us alsweill as straingeris to bring home in gritt and sell the samyen to burgesses allanerlye and to our awin uses and not to keip the same, paying unfriemens custome as ever heirtofoir we have bein in possessioun, and is competent to us as natives, and we offer us to prove nawayes hurtfull to the burrowes but profitable to thame and the haill estait of the kingdome; and as for cuntrey commodities it is licentiat to us to buy to our awin uses and to buy and sell to utheris speciallie of cornes, bread, wiveris, collis, pettis, lyme, sklaittis, woll, bestial, cuntrey claith, meill, malt, flour, tymber and such lyk.

The right of storing victual is enjoyed by the whole kingdom and should not be denied to Leith.

(19.) The toun of Leith cravis no moir priviledge of girnelling of wictuall, buying, making and selling the foirsaid commodities butt such as is usuall to all the kingdome and speciallie to all fewaris and wassallis of uther landislordis, quhilk meikle moir aucht to be granted to Leith, being the principall sea poirt and staple of this kingdome.

By the rescinding of the act not only Leith would suffer but all the lieges.

(20.) Gif this act be rescindit and thir priviledges not allowed to us quhilk is meirlye competent to us as natives and not hurtfull to the priviledge of burrowes and ar meer materis of estaitt, the publique and haill liedges in generall ar grittlye præjudgit, the toun of Leith consequentlie, and sall be forced to turne thowsandis of stronge idyll beggeris againes the actis of Parliament, quhilk we pray your Lordships to tak to your nobill consideratioun.

Repeittis the ressounes produced heiranent to your Lordships in the moneth of July last heirwith produced.

And protestis that we be hard viva voce in your Lordships presence in the discussinge of the ressounes to explaine and maintaine the same according to æquitie, and that it sall be lawfull to us to eik, reforme and adde moir ressounes as necessitie requyris, and to this effect to be wairnit to ane certane day.

Claim by Leith to be heard by the Council anent the rescinding of the act.

Ressounes given in to the Lordis of his Majesties most honorabill Privie Counsall of this kingdome be the nobilitie, gentrie and Leith, aganies the toun of Edinburgh concerninge the dischairginge the inhabitantis in Leith frome all girnelling of wictuall, etc.

Reasons presented to the Council by the nobility, gentry, and town of Leith concerning the decree of the Council anent the storing of victual in Leith.

Item—That your Lordships may the moir easilie foirsee of quhat daingerous consequens this thair project is lyk to prowne not onlie to the nobilitie and gentrie butt unto all the rest of the burrowes and to the haill commounes in the kingdome, yea and to all thair awin craftis-men and inhabitantis of Edinburgh, it will pleas your Lordships to consider of these few ressounes followinge.

The dangerous consequences of prohibiting the storing of victual in Leith.

(1.) It is ane maxime infallible approved by daylie experiance that the multitude of buyeris and selleris of any commodities will mak the mercattis of best advantage to these that haif occasioun to buy or sell. Now the number of the toun of Edinburgh wassalis in Leith that trade with all soirt of wictuall being about ane hundreth persounes besyidis thair families and servandis, and the burgesses of Edinburgh that trade in this kynd thair not exceidinge the tent part of these otheris, the præjudice of the restraint is manifest not only by the foirsaidis ods of number, quich is werie considerabill, butt also by the gritt iniquitie of the burgesses of Edinburgh daylie practises upon assurance of impunity, becauss the toun of Edinburgh hes the escheatis of all regrateris and foirstalleris within thair friedome disponed to thameselves with powar to judge upon all suche crymes, etc., in thair chairtour, 1603, and in the act of Parliament ratifyinge the samyen.

By this prohibition the numbers of buyers and sellers will be diminished and prices will consequently rise.

(2.) Notwithstanding the declaratioun maid by the toun of Edinburgh ather befor your Lordships or the Lordis of Sessioun allowinge us libertie to hyre girnellis in Leith for our awin wictuall, the nobilite, gentrie and commounes ar heavilie præjudgit gif the toun of Edinburgh wassalis and all the inhabitantis of Leith sould be debarred of the libertie of girnelling, becaus by that meane they of Leith ar indirectlye and by necessary consequens dischairged all buying of wictuall frome us, quhilk is allowed be the lawes of this kingdome to all his Majesties liedges, and so we sall be forced to sell our wictuall to ane few number of the burgesses of Edinburgh at quhat rate they pleas, and they having maid this monopole of our pryme commoditie sall went it out againe at the dearest rates to the rest of the liedges.

A few bargesses of Edinburgh would then be enabled to sell victual at the highest rates to the rest of the lieges.

(3.) Not only the nobilitie, gentrie and commounes may be damnified be the said dischairge of girnelling notwithstanding the afoirsaid declara-

Papers. and frome Orkney to Strivling, quho haif bein alwayes in use to buy barganes of wictuall frome us and transport thame to Leith as the cheife mercatt plaice for wictuall in this kingdome, gif quhen the wictuall they bring and buy frome us to Leith the inhabitantis thairof haif not libertie to girnell the wictuall quich they may lauffully buy fra thame, speciallie consideringe that the toun of Edinburgh hes pretendit decreittis, 1518, recovered befor the Lords of Sessioun bearing wictuall to be staple goodis, lyk as the letters of horning quich ar found ordourlie procedit in thair favoures, quhair of we now complaine, mak also mentioun thairof, and so nather we nor these other burrowes being friemen may dispone upone our wictuall within thair friedome butt to thair burgesses and at the least we sall be forced to transport our wictuall to Leith upone our awin hazard and under thair reverence to be wented out in small quantitie to thair wassalis over quhome they may impoise such actis and bylawes as may mak all our wictuall altogidder unprofitable to us as they doe the landwert aill in Edinburgh.¹

of Edinburgh would be forced to buy their victual
at exorbitant
rates.

(4.) And as the rest of the burrowes of this kingdome so all the craftsmen of thair awin corporatioun of Edinburgh and uther induellaris thair sall be pitifullie præjudgit by this ingrossinge of the seall of wictuall to the burgesses of Edinburgh, for all these tradesmen and utheris not having meanes to buy any gritt quantitie of wictuall togidder for the interteanement of thair servandis and families butt having recourse to thair ordinarie veeklie mercattis, whairin these few wictuall mongeris of Edinburgh sall haif in thair powar to mak ane artificiall dearth, sall be forced to buy thair daylie foode at exorbitant rates, and all the commoundes of the kingdome, speciallie these of the west country that ar in use to buy thair sommer wictuallis sall ather returne emptye without wictuallis quich they come to bring thence frome the most remote pairtes of the kingdome as they wer seine to haif done this last sommer, quhen four or fyve hundreth horses were returned home frome Leith in ane veeke without the wictuall they came for, and that by these merchandes of Edinburgh closinge up thair girnellis whairin they had stoire of wictuall, or else sall be constrained to giwe double pryce for it by such slichtis and trickis as the saidis merchandis ar knawen ordinarlie to use quhen they, having stoire of wictuall in thair girnellis, they cary but ane litle quantitie thairof doune to thair selleris at once and so making the cuntrey pepill beleive they haif no moir to sell at that tyme doe craftilye compell thame to give quhat pryces they pleas; whairas gif all the inhabitantis of Leith had the priviledge of girnelling and selling as abefoir this fraud wald not be committed.

If the inhabitants of Leith
are forbidden

(5.) If the toun of Edinburgh wassalis and utheris inhabitantis of Leith could be dischairgit girnelling of wictuall in Leith they will be

125. Supplication by John Fleeming, merchant burges of Glasgow, as follows:—George Barclay and Walter Stirlie, bailies of Glasgow, have conceived such a hatred to him that they resolved to affront and disgrace him, and as they could not accomplish it otherwise, they resolved to effect this under colour of their office. Accordingly on May last, while he was peaceably walking on the street of Glasgow, they came to him with two of their officers and apprehended him at 7 o'clock in the morning, committed him to ward in the house of Gavin Naismith, their jailor, and kept him there until the evening, though no person had complained to them of him, and they had no letters of caption or other act of warding; but while he was thus warded, they sent round to all his creditors with whom he was then in terms of agreement and payment, and moved them to arrest him by caption. Hereby he has not only lost his credit, but his estate is wrecked and undone by the rigour of his creditors in taking advantage of his unjust imprisonment procured through the hard and uncharitable dealing of the said bailies. As they have thus abused their lawful authority for their own ends to wrack and undo honest men, he craves that they be summoned before and censured by their Lordships. purpose to have slaine me," And now lately on 22d June last Arbuthnot and Leslie came to his house and attempted to bridle him, which he resenting, they drew their swords and struck out at him until the sword broke, and then Arbuthnot levelled a pistol at his breast, which he was only prevented from firing by some gentlewomen casting their gowns over it. Moreover, his wife, who was not recovered from her last sickness, was by this new assault cast "into ane deidlie disease of the quhilk she is not lyke to recover." the office of bailie of Kyle and he has studied to approve himself worthy of the trust reposed in him. But the administration of justice and maintenance of peace among the lieges have been greatly hindered by a dispute between Dowglas, who has obtained a gift of the clerkship of the said bailiary from the King, and George Angus, the former clerk, which has engendered "suche ane heart burning and heate betuix these parteis as they both disdaine to keepe the courts of the said bailierie," and therefore he has not been able to get a court held for a long time. He therefore craves their Lordships to take order with them, or give warrant to him to make choice of another clerk during his

- 7th July 1631. 141. Supplication by Andrew, Bishop of Galloway, and Sir Patrick M'Kie of Larg, as follows:—The said Sir Patrick first built a bridge of stone over the Water of Polnewer, which after some years was so undermined and shaken by the violence of the water and by the frequent passing of nolt and horses going to and from Ireland that it fell down. Thereafter a new bridge of timber was erected, but from the same causes it is likely to stand but a short time unless some course be taken for repairing and upholding it. As it is the only passage between Scotland and Ireland, if the bridge be cut off great inconvenience will accrue to the lieges, and they therefore crave a commission for the uplifting of a toll upon every horse and cow crossing the water there for the maintenance and repair of the bridge and calsey, with this condition that no gentleman or others riding along the bridge shall be liable to the payment of the duty. - 7th July 1631. 143. Supplication by Sir William Cuninghame of Caprintoun, baillie of Kyle, as follows:—In the Parliament of 1612 there was an act made limiting the number of messengers to be appointed within each shireffdom, and this number, so far as the shire of Air is concerned, is complete. But this shire is "verie spacious, comprehending within the same the baillereis of Kyle, Carrick and Cuninghame," and the number of messengers is not sufficient for the service of the lieges, who are obliged to send sometimes twenty and sonetimes thirty miles for a messenger, and the supplicant himself is often "drivin to great straits in the executioun of your Lordships directiouns partlie anent the taxatioun and otherwayes as materis fallis out concerning my office." He has represented this to the Lyon King of Arms and desired him to admit three or four more messengers for the said shireffdom; and this the Lyon is willing to do, as he sees the necessity thereof, but refuses to proceed without authorisation from their Lordships. This accordingly the supplicant craves. [On the back] "Apud Halyrudhous, 7 July, 1631. Fiat ut petitur. GEO: CANCELL^r. I.P.D."

148. Supplication by Sir James Gordoun, younger of Lesmore, and 9th July 1631. Simsoun, son of William Simsoun, messenger, as follows:—Sir Supplication by Sir James Gordoun, younger of Lesmore, for a summons against Sir Alexander Gordoun of Clunie "craftilie" stole the said Sir James to the horn, which obliged him at great expence to come to Edinburgh to obtain a suspensiou and relaxation thereof. Having obtained these, he sent them by the hand of the said Simsoun to Aberdein to Alexander Watsoun, messenger there, so that he might be relaxed at the cross of Clunie and others.

Aberdein where he had been denounced. But on Sir Alexander Gordon learning this, he and Dame Elizabeth Gordon, Lady Wardes, sent John Leith of Harthill on 16th June last to the dwelling house of the said Alexander Watsoun, where finding the said boy (Simsoun) with the letters at the door, he violently made him prisoner and carried him to the Laird of Clunyes dwelling house in Aberdein and kept him there until the day of the suspension was past and until they had made protestation against the supplicant for not producing the letters and sent the same on 4th July instant to his advocate, Mr. Robert Burnet. They still detain the boy, and when the messenger pressed to get the letters back they threatened to kill him with their swords. They accordingly crave summons against the persons named. Dundee.

149. Supplication by William Alexander, merchant burgess of Dundie, as follows:—The King was graciously pleased in respect of his great losses at the hands of the Dunkirkers, who robbed him of his ship and goods and so prevented him paying his debts, to grant him a protection for one year after the appending of the great seal thereto, which was the 2nd July instant, he paying the interest of his said debts meanwhile. But notwithstanding hereof the provost and bailies of Dundie have apprehended and warded him for some debts and cautionries and refuse to acknowledge the protection. He craves summons against them. liam Harper, his tenant, for a summons
against Mr.
John Greir of Kapenoche

who have illegally apprehended the said William Harper.

150. Supplication by John Greirsoun of Neather Ker and William Harper, his tenant, as follows:—On June last Mr. John Greir of Kapenoche, John Lindsay of Iaggane, Edward Stit in Kapenoche, William Hutsoun, John Mortoun and Andrew Wilsoun there, came by way of hamesucken to the said William Harper's house, under cloud and silence of night, seized him and, binding his hands behind his back as if he had been a thief, carried him in this disgracefull manner to the provost and bailies of Dumfries and desired them to commit him to their jail. This they refused to do as his apprehenders could produce no commission for his arrest nor verify any offence done by the supplicant. Thereupon his said master desired them to release his servant, who was his Majesty's free liege, but they proudly avowed the taking of him "and said if ever I preast to eshew fra thame they sould bind me hand and foote lyke ane sheepe." They then carried him away and have kept him a prisoner for . The supplicants crave that these persons complained upon be summoned before the Council. [On the back] "*Apud Halyrudhous, 12 July, 1631. Supplication
by John Ross,

151. Supplication by John Ros, minister at Blair, as follows:—Some 28 or 29 years since an act was made by the minister, elders and session of the kirk of Blair that £10 Scots should be paid to the minister at Blair, for a session for every burial thereafter within the kirk, and that this money should be employed by direction of the minister and elders, and this act has been continually observed since. In April last Janet Mitchell, spouse of Alexander Andersoun, portioner of Banchrie, died, and her husband dealt with the supplicant and several of the elders in the parish to have his wife buried within the kirk, and this was granted on his promise to pay the £10 after the burial. The money was appointed by the session to be used in mending some holes in the roof of the kirk, and the supplicant was to uplift it and see it so employed. Four or five times he sent some of the elders to crave the money, but payment was refused, Anderson declaring "that in despite of the minister and elders and hail sessioun he sould not pay that soume." The supplicant thereupon purchased a precept from the sheriff of Perth charging him to pay, but desirous of obtaining the money otherwise than by legal means he went personally with two elders to him upon 4th July instant and desired him "in pleasant terms" to pay the sum or else he would use the laws of the country against him. For this cause only "he verie disgracefullie upbraidit me, calling me vaine, raving gowke, windie fellow and contemptible, stoupped at me with his feete, and spatt at me, gave me and all the judges in Scotland ane defyanace in that bussines, so as I wes forced to depart, and caused the beddell of the kirk to give him anie copie of the shireffs precept; quhilk he having received he rent the same in peeces, tramped it in a myre, and preast to have followed after me to have killed me, if he had not beene stayed." This vilifying of the ministers by their own parishioners is apt to be imitated by others of the like disposition unless a remedy be provided, and the supplicant therefore craves a summons against his assailant. [On the back] "Apud Halyrudhous, 12 July, 1631. Fiat ut petitur."

152. Supplication by Sir Thomas Hope of Craighall, King's Advocate, and Sir Harie Wod of Bonytoun, as partie grieved, as follows:—In contravention of the laws forbidding the wearing of firearms and convocation of the lieges in arms Francis Ogilvie of Newgrange, elder, James Ogilvie, fiar thereof, his son, and their followers, having resolved out of their hatred and malice against him to take the life of the said Sir Harry Wod, the said Francis Ogilvie, accompanied by David Ogilvie, his servant, Arthur Ogilvie, his bastard son, John Ogilvie in Follow, his servant, and a number of others, all armed with swords, staves and other weapons and the prohibited hagbutts and pistols, came on being Sunday, to the kirk of St. Vigeans (which is the supplicant's parish kirk), and "in contempt of the Lords Sabbath and disgrace of his Majesteis governement ranked thameselffes in tyme of divine service at the kirk doore in militarie forme and awaited a long tyme till they sould have rancountered me and tane my life." Further, the said James Ogilvie

12th July 1631. Supplication by Sir Harry Wood of Bonnyton for a summons against Francis Ogilvie of Newgrange and others whom he accuses of carrying prohibited weapons and of injuring his property.

accompanied by William Feachie, servitor to Lord Ogilvie, James Ogilvie, pedagogue to the Master of Ogilvie, Black William Ogilvie of Kennie, David Balfour of Gund and others of the lieges came on to the supplicants lands of Lethame, rode through his growing corn and trod down the same, and "contemptuously sent to bid the proud shireff come out if he durst; they knew his traine; and they wer there als manie as he used to ryde with." They also daily ride about armed with hagbuts and pistols ready to molest such of the lieges as they have any quarrel with. The supplicants therefore crave summons against these persons. (Signed) S. 153. Supplication by Dame Annabel Erskine, spouse to Sir John Buchanan of that ilk, as follows:—On 27th October last the said Sir John was put to the horn at her instance for not paying to her the sum of 2000 merks modified by the Lords of Council and Session to her as her yearly allowance during the time that he has been forth of the kingdom and also yearly during his further absence; but he most proudly remains at the horn, and in contempt of the law has withdrawn to an isle within the loch of where he keeps himself close and obscure. He has there built a house and furnished it with victuals and other necessaries, and keeps his boat chained to his gate so that none can get in or out without his permission. He has further disobeyed their Lordships' charges to compear before them and she now craves letters of treason against him and the keepers of his houses for the rendering of them and the warding of his person in the castle of Blaknes.  allane at the instance of the said John Cheyne, to whome Maissie was due 600 merks of principal and 200 merks of expenses, and having appraised the said goods he took them again to the said Henry to offer them to him for the appraised prices ; but he, on hearing of what had been done, came, accompanied by Thomas Massie, his brother, George and Patrick Massie, his sons, and Adam Ga in Ochterallane, all armed with swords, gauntlets, steel bonnets, corn-forks and other weapons, and violently reft the goods from him. When, in token of his being deforced, the said messenger brake his wand the said George in contempt of his Majesty's authority bade him put up his wand and go and hang himself and all messengers so far as he was concerned. The messenger then having gone to the fields where the said Henry's oxen and sheep were pasturing to have poinded them, he and the persons foresaid with Robert Arbuthnet, George Leslie, John Gordoun, and Robert Harper, all servants to Alexander Udnie of Achterallane, Gawin Hunter, Alexander Tailyeour, George Low and George Pyat and others, came to him and threatened to take his life if he offered to poind any goods there. Laird of Monymusk, whom he accuses of inciting his servants to assault, as also against the said servants.

174. Supplication by Patrick Edzer, provost of Wigtoun, as follows: 21st July 1631. —On June last, John Edzer, merchant burges of Edinburgh, his brother, sent a packet of letters to Thomas M^cKie, Clerk of Wigtoun, in which were inclosed certain letters under the Signet at the supplicant's instance against John Logane, notary in Monygoiff, and Archibald M^cMuldeoch there, for making certain arreisted sums forthcoming to the supplicant. But the said John intercepted the packet in the town of Monygoiff, broke it open and read the whole missives "and with his awne hand filled up the Kings letters at his pleasure, insert suche dayes thairin as he thought good," and so has made the same useless to the supplicant. He craves summons against him. [On the back] "Apud Halyrudhous, 21 July, 1631. Fiat ut petitur. GEO: CANCELL^r. I.P.D."

Supplication by Patrick Edzer, provost of Wigtoun, for a summons against John Logan, notary, who intercepted a packet of the complainer.

175. Supplication by Elizabeth Ramsay and William Bischeop in Currie, her spouse, as follows:—Their Lordships have frequently ordained James Quhytheid in Currie to flit and remove from a house and chamber and yard belonging thereto in Currie into which he has violently intruded himself by breaking up of the doors, but he still retains possession and so commits such an oppression on the supplicants "as ought not to be sufferit in ane civill cuntrey." They crave letters to an officer of arms for his ejection. [On the back] "Apud Halyrudhous, 21 July, 1631. Fiat ut petitur. GEO: CANCELL^r. I.P.D."

21st July 1631. 177. Supplication by John Littill, servitor to the Earl of Nithisdail. Their Lordships know how that he has been detained in this burgh at the instance of Mr. David Leitch, minister, charged before his Majesty's Justice with the burning of his house. He has already kept six criminal diets, each being continued and he placed under large caution to abide in the town, where in a manner he is a stranger, his own residence being in Ireland, where his family remains. "I am forced to stay heere under the odious imputatioun of treason, my whole meanes almost spent and my good name brought in questioun in so haynous ane point whair of I am most innocent, and so often have craved to be cleere. And seeing now the twentie twa of this instant is appointed for my tryell I humbelie beseek your Lordships that it may be the last dyet." [On the back] "Apud Halyrudhous, 21 July, 1631. 180. Supplication by Sir James Dowglas of Morvingtoun as follows:—21st July 1631. Supplication by Sir James Douglas of Mordington for suspension of horning.
In July last Mr. George Roull, minister at Morvingtoun, obtained their Lordships' decree against him for payment of £40 as a fine for his demolishing a house belonging to the said minister, and he intends to denounce him for not paying the same, although the matter is under submission, they having referred it to Sir George Home of Manderstoun and John Gaits, minister at Bonkill, for the supplicant's part, and to Sir John Home of Blacader, and Mr. Allan Lundie, minister at Huttoun, for the minister's part, who have ordered him to grant a lease of the houses contraverted to the said Mr. George for his lifetime and the said Mr. George to discharge the decree obtained against him. This he is willing to do and also to find caution to pay the sum claimed if it be found that he ought so to do. He therefore craves suspension of the horning. [On the back]. 181. Supplication by John Murdoch, burgess of Wigtoun, and the provost and bailies of Wigtoun for their interest, as follows:—21st July 1631. Supplication by John Murdoch, burgess of Wigtoun, and the magistrates of that burgh for a summons against Sir John Vaus of Longcastle and others.
Sir John Vaus of Longcastell, knight, Patrick Vaus, his son, and Patrick Vaus in Kilderrache, being at the horn at the instance of the said John Murdoch for not paying him a debt of 1000 merks and interest thereof for many years past, and being unable to obtain the benefit of the laws, he has charged the Sheriff of Wigtoun and the said bailies to apprehend them. But the said rebels go about the country armed with hagbutts and pistols and when they come within the bounds of the said burgh they have such an armed following that the said bailies have no power to deal with them and dare not do so. They crave that these rebels may be summoned before their Lordships. [On the back] "Apud Halyrudhous, 21 July 1631. Fiat ut petitur. GEO : CANCELL^r. I.P.D."

They therefore crave letters authorising them to make public proclamation at the market cross of Aberdein and other places charging all the lieges and subjects within the shires of Aberdein, Kincardin and Banff, that none of them presume to come with arms and convocation of the lieges, but only peaceably, and that they keep the peace and good rule and quietness. 183. Supplication by John Leslie of Pitcaple, Hector Abircrombie of Fetterneir, Andro Meldrum, Patrick Leslie, Alexander Rutherford, Patrick Dwe, Alexander Stewart, Alexander Gardine, and James Collestoun, burgesses of Aberdein, Alexander Gordoun of Braymoir, John Forbes, servitor to the Bishop of Aberdein, and Robertson, widow of Alexander Middiltoun of Berrihillock, heritors of the King's and Bishop's "kavills" of Neather Done, for themselves and on behalf of the barons and heritors whose lands adjoin the said water, as follows:— There are several good acts of Parliament for the proper keeping of cruives in fresh waters, especially one of the second Parliament of King James the Fourth, cap. xv., in which it is ordained "that freshe waters be suffered to stand in forbiddin tyme; that the mid stane be alwayes free be the space of fyve foote; that the Saturdayes slop be observed and kept; and that ilke seik of the saids crooves be fyve inche wyde." The execution of the said act is committed to the sheriffs, stewards and bailies of burghs under a penalty of £20 to be exacted of the officer who fails herein. Yet William Forbes, Mr. Henry Buchane, Alexander Henrie, Mr. Alexander Keith, Alexander Seatoun, the heirs of Alexander Gray, the heirs of Thomas Forbes and William Petrie, portioners of the cruives of Drone [sic], preferring their own private gain to the public good "have bigged and sett doun a number of croves in the said water farre abone the nomber used there of old; yea, so manie as pleaseth thame." 184. Supplication by William Craufurde, portioner of Meikle Govane, as follows:—On 20th July instant, in a Justice Court held in the tolbooth of Edinburgh by Mr. James Robertsoun, advocate, justice depute, John M^cInnair, son of James M^cInnair in Meikle Govane, and Patrick Gall M^cFarland, burgess of Glasgow, with the said James M^cInnair, were accused by the supplicant and by his Majesty's Advocate of the destroying under cloud and silence of night of 900 growing "halthorne tries growand in my hedge upone my landis of Meikle Govane sett and plantit be me thairintill, togidder with thrie scoir plaine and asche tries," within his orchard and grounds, and of wearing hagbuts and pistols. Upon trial John M^cInnair was convicted of art and part of this destruction and of having a hagbut in his hand two days after at a meeting between the said John M^cInnair and the supplicant upon the lands of Meikle Govane, and Patrick Gall M^cFarland was convicted of wearing pistols on various occasions. But the judge foresaid has continued pronouncing sentence until Friday, the 22nd instant, that he may advise with their Lordships thereupon. He therefore craves that their Lordships will order a punishment befitting the heinousness of the crime, and also ordain the persons convicted to be kept in sure prison within the tolbooth of Edinburgh until the supplicant be satisfied for his losses and until the said John M^cNair exhibit before the Justice and his deputes the persons guilty of the foresaid wrong. 185. Supplication by Patrick [Galt M^cFar]lane, burges of Glasgow, and John M^cInnair, son of James M^cInnair, indweller in Meikle Govane, narrating their prosecution by William Crawford, [as in the foregoing petition] and that leaning to their own innocence they offered themselves for trial, but the assisers being for the most part friends of the prosecutor, they were convicted. They will say nothing against the form of their conviction, but the said Patrick represents that being in debt to Lord Lorne and his servants in great sums of money, and being on his way to the country of Argyle with the money upon him to repay the same, he carried the pistolet only for his personal safety. And the said John represents that he is but a mean man and unable to give redress to a powerful party for this alleged wrong, and that having been committed to prison by the judge and having remained therein for the past twenty-four hours, he has been sufficiently punished for any offence committed by him. He therefore craves his liberty and the imposition of such a satisfaction as he is able to give; and the said Patrick craves their Lordships' pardon for his offence, places himself in their will, and promises never to bear a pistolet hereafter except in his Majesty's service. for a more convenient
arrangement of the teinds of his estate now held in trust
by Robert Douglas of Blaikerstoun.

186. Supplication by John Stewart of Coldinghame, as follows:—
About nine or ten years ago he found that his estate was heavily burdened with debt and being desirous of relieving the same so that his creditors might be paid and his friends who were cautioners for him untroubled, he divested himself of all save a small portion reserved for maintaining himself and his family, and placed it in the hands of the deceased William Douglas of Blaikarstoun as his trusty friend and well qualified by frugal and careful management to accomplish the end desired. Accordingly, during his lifetime the said William Douglas, and since his death, Robert Douglas, now of Blaikerstoun, his son-in-law, have possessed his whole estate, except a certain quantity of teinds reserved, as aforesaid, for his own maintenance. These, during the lifetime of the said William, he uplifted wherever it was most convenient for him so to do at his own option, but now he finds no such kindly usage at the hands of the said Robert, who, instigated by some evil-willer, instead of giving him his own option, as formerly, seeks to drive him to uplift his own maintenance from places most remote from his house of Coldinghame, sometimes sixteen and twenty miles away, so that he is forced either to abandon the same or spend the one half in winning of the other; sometimes to stack and sell it in the place for what it would fetch, and then he lost his fodder, so necessary for such as have beasts. This last year the teinds of Sticheil were appointed to him, sixteen miles distant, and for that reason he has reaped but small benefit from them. Now if he had the teinds near his own house of Coldinghame, it would be more profitable for him and it would be but equitable also, seeing it is all he obtains from his entire estate, and can be in no way prejudicial to the said Robert Douglas. He accordingly craves that instead of the teinds of Sticheil he may have those of Coldinghame and Haymouthe, which will only amount to twenty four chalders of victual, after deduction of the minister's stipend and the thirds of Rentoune's lands. It will also remove a cause of disput between the supplicant and the said Robert Douglas, who causelessly accuses him of encroaching upon his thirds and corns uplifted from the tenents of Coldingham. He craves also that parties, including Lord Home, may be summoned on the matter. [On the back] "Apud Halyrudhous, 21 July, 1631. Fiat summonitio ut petitur to the day of ."

Yet Rawfe Ker, Alexander Wilsoun, and John Clerk in Dryburgh, Clerk in Bemerside, Alexander Areskine, son to the said Rawfe, and George Halyburtoun, son to John Halyburtoun in Dryburgh, met in the said Rawfe Ker's house on and determined to break down his said desk and cut it in pieces; and Alexander Wilsoun gave to George Halyburtoun an axe for the purpose, assuring him that his doing so would be acceptable service to the whole parish. Accordingly the said Alexander Areskine and George Halyburtoun came to the said kirk, and while the former stood without to watch and "espy" who came by, the latter broke up the choir door, and going to the supplicant's seat pulled it down and with his axe hewed the same in pieces. 199. Supplication by the commissioners for the free burghs of the kingdom, as follows:—The liberties anciently secured to the free burghs have been of late greatly impaired by certain specious overtures by particular persons who have nothing in view but their own advantage. For example, Robert Buchane, burges of Abirdene, under colour of preserving his Majesty's waters from the unseasonable fishing for pearls has obtained a patent by which he appropriates the privilege of fishing for pearls to himself, a commodity "whiche hes bene ever heirtofore custom-able reaped by the burrowis," and his so doing is to the prejudice of all others of the lieges. The sense of this moved them to represent the matter to the late Convention of Estates who remitted the matter to their Lordships; and they now crave that their Lordships would give effect thereto by recalling the said patent and suffer the burghs to follow their accustomed trade in seeking for pearls and disposing thereof as formerly. No sooner, however, had they got out of the town about two pair of butts than "the said Williame first blindfolded me within my awne cloake, tooke my sword frome me, kuist me to the ground, boxed me with his elbowes and knees upon the breast and shoulders and thairby verie cruellie birsed and bruised me, drew out my awin whinger and thairwith hurt and woundit me on the hand to the effusioun of my blood in great quantitie." Thereafter they went to the house of the said James Graham and threatened to take his life if he refused to reveal where Lady Foullertoun was, “whairwith my wife wes so astonished that she lykewayes conceived ane great sicknesse, of the quhilk she is lyke to dee.” Further, on the morrow, when the said Lady Foullertoun came home to her dwelling house accompanied by some of her friends for her defence, the said Captain came to them and “with manie threatnings and execrable

207. Supplication by John Gordoun of Innermarkie, tutor of James Gordoun, now of Rothiemay, as follows:—^{2nd August 1631.} Their Lordships have decided that he is the legal tutor of the said James Gordoun and that he is to have the administration of him and his estate during his minority, but in respect of his distressed estate, he having nothing at present to maintain himself upon, Catharine Forbes, Lady of Rothiemay, his mother, offered to maintain him freely upon the large jointure which she has out of his living until he gets means of his own, provided she had the upbringing of him. This their Lordships refused and ordered him to be educated at the schools in Aberdein by the advice of the Bishop of Aberdein, and that a pedagogue should be chosen for him by the Bishop of Murray, and he is informed that their Lordships have further decided that the said Lady Rothemay is to have repayment of her charges for maintenance of the said James when he comes to means of his own. Now this is contrary to her first offer and is no benefit at all. The supplicant as his lawful tutor is quite willing to do the same and has the right thereto, and unless his mother stands by her first offer she ought to have nothing to do with his maintenance. As it is she and her friends have chosen the child's pedagogue without reference to the Bishop of Murray; and as to his being brought up in Aberdein, the foresaid two bishops can testify to their Lordships that he may be brought up better where he was and upon half of the expense. He therefore craves (1) that the said Catharine be ordained to maintain her son freely without repayment or else have no meddling therewith; (2) that he have the choice of his pedagogue by the advice of the said two bishops; and (3) that the said bairn be brought up at the schools where these bishops judge he may most conveniently and profitably be educated. The said Lachlan M^cClaine has attended in Edinburgh all this last winter, and being very infirm, cannot well come back to keep the tenth of July, so they crave that their appearance may be dispensed with. [On the back] "Apud Halyrudhous, 5 July 1632. Fiat ut petitur. GEO: CANCELL^s. I.P.D."

Supplication by Archibald, Lord of Lorne, and others, curators to John Mackinnon of that ilk, that they may be relieved from appearing before the Council on the 10th of July.

221. Supplication by Neill M^cNeill of Bara. Their Lordships have ordered his compearance before them once in every two years in the month of July, a course which has never been taken with any of his quality within the Yles, he not being "chiftane of ane clan nor ane frehalder of his Majestie bot onelie tennent to the Laird of Tarbet," who is answerable for him; and by his coming already but once or twice his mean estate is greatly exhausted, as it takes over three years rent of his living to make the journey to and from Edinburgh. His caution will still stand for his compearance if he is complained against by any one, and therefore he craves that their Lordships will dispense with his appearing. [On the back, but the date is torn away] "Fiat ut petitur. GEO: CANCELL^s. I.P.D."

c. July 1632. Supplication by Neill M^cNeill of Bara that he may be relieved from appearing before the Council.

222. Fragment of a paper, apparently containing answers by George Home of Manderstoun to objectors against the granting of the protection craved by him. He refers to the King's warrant for apprehending John Neill and delivering him to the Sheriff of Berwick, who was to present him to justice before the Privy Council of Scotland. And now Neill is tried and lawfully condemned. Reference is made to others delated by the deceased Alexander Hamiltoun who died penitent, and to the fact that a commission has been craved to the ministry for examining witnesses thereupon, and the representer desires protection (as was his Majesty's pleasure) for following out this pursuit to its final close; though some of his creditors, and specially some known to be his "malitious unfriends" have protested. The matter is one concerning not only his life and estate but the glory of God and the King's pleasure; and as the parties upon whom he complains are delated to be actors with John Neill, who has now been found guilty by a lawful assise of all the charges laid against him, equity and reason demand that no impediment should be placed in the way of his seeking justice.

Undated. Supplication by Sir George Home of Manderstoun.
